ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 16, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 29th April; from Allahabad and Madras to the 27th April; and from Calcutta to the 26th April.

THE Viceroy and Lady Dufferin, and also Sir Frederick Roberts, have arrived at Simla.

THE Ameer's troops are reported to have defeated the insurgents with heavy loss at Ataghar, some forty miles south-east of Kelat-i-Ghilzai.

THE Ameer's Commander-in-Chief is also reported to have defeated the Jughari, Huzaras, and Ghilzais near Mukar with heavy loss.

THE news that the Ghilzais have been defeated with a loss of 500 killed, whilst the Ameer's troops have lost only fifty, is discredited in Calcutta. But there is no doubt that the Khandahar troops have at least gained a decisive victory at Marug. The relief of the garrison at Kelat-i-Ghilzai is therefore regarded as a question of but a few days.

THE latest rumours from the frontier state that the Ghilzais are preparing for a great effort to shake off the Ameer's dominions about the middle of next month.

THE report of the death of Hla Oo, the notorious dacoit chief, has been confirmed by his wife, who was present when he was killed.

A FIRE in Mandalay has destroyed 250 houses. The Bombay-Burma Trading Company's offices narrowly escaped.

THE investigation and settlement of claims against the late Burmese Government commenced on the 27th inst. at Mandalay.

H.H. THE GAEKWAR OF BARODA will shortly proceed to England.

H.H. THE MAHARAJAH HOLKAR OF INDORE, accompanied by Sir Lepel Griffin, has arrived in Bombay, en route to Europe.

THE NAWAB SIR SALAR JUNG will proceed to Europe by the mail steamer next week.

THE sower who shot Major Neill, of the Central India Horse at Agra, has been found guilty of murder. The sentence of death has to be confirmed by the High Court.

M. BOUTELLIER, French Consul at Mandalay, will succeed the late M. Follet in the French Consulate at Bombay.

THE Nagpore-Bergal Railway operations are to be renewed at once, so that the completed earthworks may be consolidated by this season's rains.

In commemoration of the Jubilee the Lient.-Governor of the Punjab has sanctioned the foundation of a number of scholarships for Mahomedans.

A GENERAL committee has been formed in Madras to make arrangements for the celebration of the Jubilee of the Pope.

ATTEMPTS are being made in Madras to celebrate the Queen's Jubilee on the 20th June.

CAPTAIN R. W. E. CARNEGIE, R.A., Aide-de-Camp to his uncle, Lieutenant-General Carnegie, Commanding the Northern Division, has died of typhoid fever at Mableshe-war.

MRS. SULLIVAN, wife of Lieutenant Sullivan, has been killed in a carriage accident at Madras. The horses became restive and bolted, and Mrs. Sullivan, in attempting to alight, was thrown on her head.

It has been decided to establish a corps of Artillery Volunteers, to take the form of garrison artillery, in Bombay.

A NEW Catholic Chapel has been opened at Baroda by Archbishop Porter of Bombay.

THE proposal to form an Indian Sandhurst receives the cordial approval of the Native Press.

AN English lady in Canada is reported to have left a legacy of £50,000 to Mr. C. S. Nazir, Manager of the Parsee Victoria Theatrical Company, whose acquaintance she made during his recent professional visit to England.

THE Jhelum bridge works are making satisfactory progress, and sixteen out of the eighteen piers have already been erected.

THE annual "Mahmal-e-Sharif" (caravan of pilgrims) will set out this year from Damascus for the Holy City of Mecca on the 5th of Shawal next, corresponding to June 28.

THE Turkish telegraphic route has been interrupted beyond Bagdad, and the Moulmeiu route to Siam beyond the Indian frontier has also been blocked.

MR. CROSTHWAITE, Chief Commissioner of Burma, has left Mandalay for Rangoon.

A STRONG protest is being made, and a largely signed memorial is to be sent to the Punjab Government against the appointment of a Native Assistant Commissioner to Simla.

THE MAHARAJA OF BHURTPUR sends a deputation to England to represent his State at the Jubilee celebration.

THE hot weather has set in very suddenly during the past few days in Upper India, though the temperature in Lower Bengal is still below the average. The climax so far was reached at Jhansi on Monday last, when a maximum of 120 degrees was registered.

THE GOVERNOR OF MADRAS AND NATIVE PASSENGERS.—The new Governor of Madras seems to be determined to achieve popularity. He is putting himself into close and sympathetic communication with the people, and no detail that affects their condition is too insignificant for his personal attention. In this he is in striking contrast with his too dignified predecessor, who assumed the god, with so much self-complacence, on the lofty heights of the Nilgherries. The other day his Excellency paid an unexpected visit to the Central Railway Station, where he had an opportunity of seeing how Native passengers are treated. A correspondent of the Madras Times describes what occurred on that occasion in the following terms:—Many of the Native third-class passengers happened to be standing in groups outside the carriages, and not attempting to enter any of them. His Excellency noticed this, and, seeing several empty carriages at the lower end of the train, called the attention of one of the railway employés to the circumstance, and inquired why the passengers were not allowed to enter those carriages. The reply was that these vehicles were intended for passengers at road-side stations, and that other carriages would presently be attached for the passengers now waiting on the platform. Hearing this, his Excellency exclaimed: "Shame! shame! shame!" His Excellency afterwards inspected some of the carriages which passengers had already entered, and, counting the number huddled together in one carriage, inquired how many passengers the carriage was supposed to seat. The reply was that the carriage generally carried from fifty to sixty passengers. Another "Shame! shame!" burst from his Excellency as he heard the reply. Passing on, his Excellency saw a whole carriage without a single passenger in it, and inquired for whom that empty carriage was intended. His Excellency was told that it was intended for one of the railway officials. This drew forth another exclamation of "Shame!" His Excellency then asked for a list of officials who travelled alone and in similar carriages, and was informed that such carriages were set apart for the Agent and Manager, the Traffic Manager, the Chief Engineer, the Locomotive Superintendent and the Telegraph Engineer. His Excellency took a note of this and left the station.

Notes of the Week.

A TELEGRAM, dated "St. Petersburg, Sunday night," is published this morning in the London papers, and contains the following refreshing and highly interesting intelligence:—"It is incorrect and misleading to say that the Afghan Frontier negotiations are broken off. The meetings of the Commission have been suspended, and may or may not be resumed; but there is no reason to suppose that all hopes of arriving at a settlement have been finally abandoned."

Who can have inspired this cheering intelligence, and for what purpose has it been telegraphed? Does any sane Englishman imagine that Russian designs upon India, which Englishmen have made up their minds do exist, will be checked or diverted by imaginary boundary lines? Would it not be better and more dignified upon our part to recall Sir West Ridgway, and thus show to Russia that we are not going to be fooled any longer? We can no more stop the advance of Russia in Central Asia than could Dame Partington's broom push back the Atlantic Ocean. But if Russia intends to dispute the possession of India with us our policy is to be prepared in India for the coming event—not to be fighting with shadows outside of our own territory.

BUT this is what the Russophobists will not acknowledge, and so we shall have schemes for advancing British troops beyond the frontier, and giving battle to Russia on the Helmund or at Herat. It is to be hoped, however, that our statesmen have learnt some wisdom from past experience of interference in Afghanistan affairs. Russia may be stirring up intrigues at Cabul and Candahar, but the key to India is not yet in her hands. If, however, we are foolish enough to go in for another Afghan campaign by advancing our standards, we shall be playing the very game she wishes us to do, and so court disaster.

THE GWALIOR ZENANA appears to have been a real Indian mine of wealth, five millions sterling of silver having been found buried there. The investment of part of this treasure in English Government Securities is a wise step, whether official pressure was brought to bear upon the Gwalior Durbar or not. The example set by the Regency of that State ought to be encouraged. If the Native Chiefs and Princes were persuaded to invest part of their savings with the Government of India, it would be a better guarantee for our hold upon that country than many battalions.

AGAINST this view the Times Calcutta correspondent thinks it worth while to telegraph to his journal the opinions of certain obscure vernacular papers, who protest that had the Maharaja of Gwalior, who hid the money, been alive, he would not have entrusted his coin to British hands. Very likely not. The British Government had (wrongly we believe) their suspicions of him, and until he got back his fort of Gwalior, he had his suspicions of the British Government. But the step which has now been taken of investing a portion of the Gwalior hoardings in English Securities is a very wise one, and ought to be followed up.

THE "distinguished Russian official" who communicated to the Times correspondent yesterday the extraordinary intelligence that the Afghans were "not likely to understand or appreciate such refinements of modern civilisation as arbitration," must surely have been laughing in his sleeve at the gentlemen of the Press. The Times, however, considers it of such importance that it gives it the honour of a conspicuous position and big type. It gives equal prominence to another piece of gratifying intelligence—viz., that before a Russian army can march through Badakshan upon India it will have to make arrangements to provide itself with rations. We live and learn.

REGARDING the discussion in the House of Commons about the leave of absence asked for the Duke of Connaught, the Broad Arrow remarks that "the Radical gentlemen who evinced such good taste in opposing the Bill seem to have forgotten that when his Royal Highness accepted the Bombay command, he did so consenting to vacate the same whenever it was determined to abolish the Presidency commands, as recommended, it is believed, by the Finance Commission. Were any other officer in this post the suggested reform could not be carried out until the five years' tenure of office had expired. The Radical objectors to the Duke should therefore rather rejoice that the post is held by one who is quite ready to immediately acquiesce in a scheme of retrenchment should the same be decided upon."

THE same journal contains also the following sensible remarks regarding the sensational telegrams which are daily appearing concerning the reported disturbances in Afghanistan:—"In discussing the news from Afghanistan as conveyed in the latest telegrams it should be borne in mind that the Ghilzai tribes, which are reported to have risen against the Ameer and given battle to his troops are not altogether united or of one mind. The Southern Ghilzais are in rebellion, and they can muster a considerable force, but the Northern Ghilzais are the more powerful, and no information has yet been received of their revolt. Again, it should be remembered that Ghuzni, Ghelat-i-Ghilzai, and Candahar are now strong fortresses, defended by artillery, and that neither Southern nor Northern Ghilzais have even a field gun. The Ameer's Army is fairly equipped in this respect, and his infantry, to a considerable extent, is armed with breechloading rifles. Any serious battle is, therefore, likely to be with the strong, although the Ghilzais, who are daring enough, may score a victory here and there over some of the Ameer's detached irregulars. The real danger which Abdur Rahman runs is from treachery amongst his own soldiers or in any of his garrisons; but so long as he continues to pay his troops within reasonable time—not keeping them, say, more than three months in arrears—they will probably continue to fight for him. Besides, they know that he has no bowels of compassion towards those who offend him, and fear, therefore, may keep them loyal."

THE rupee has tumbled down in value to 1s. 4½d., and it may go lower still. A question is being asked as to when the value was above par, and there appears to be some uncertainty in replying to the query. It was certainly at or above par just before the Mutiny of 1857, and in Lord Auckland's Governor-Generalship its exchange value, if we mistake not, was 2s. 6d., at which figure it was said that that anything but eminent statesman remitted to England nearly all his salary—keeping merely his sumptuary allowances for entertainments in India.

A LIBEL case which has created some sensation in Ceylon was heard the other day in the court of the District Judge at Colombo. The action was brought by Mr. W. H. Moor, of the Ceylon Civil Service, against the editors and proprietors of the Ceylon Observer, and the statements complained of were contained in a letter sent to the paper by two missionaries, Messrs. Picken and Rees. In this letter Mr. Moor was, a local paper states, "charged with conduct which, if proved against him, should undoubtedly secure his dismissal from the service. Mr. Moor demanded an apology from the Observer editors, who refused this until they had communicated with their correspondents in India; and hence the action. Great interest was naturally taken in the trial, it being expected that Mr. Moor would get into the box and deny the charges of fraud and discourtesy brought against him by the missionaries, and that the missionaries would at least endeavour to prove their statements. But this is just what did not occur. Counsel for the plaintiff contended that it was the duty of the defendants to prove the charges they had made against Mr. Moor, while counsel for the defendants replied in effect, 'if Mr. Moor has not the moral courage to go into the witness-box and deny on oath the charges we made, we will not do him the injustice of weighing the balance too heavily against him by proving our charges.' The trial, therefore, consisted of mere legal argument, neither side leading evidence to substantiate or deny the charges, a fact which—the district judge remarked—might lead to a very unsatisfactory result." The decision in the case had not been given when the last mail left Colombo.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 15.

Mr. Westland, acting Secretary of the Financial Department, lately visited Gwalior to make arrangements for taking over three and a half crores of rupees, which the Regency is lending to the Indian Government. He found that treasure to the extent of over £5,000,000 sterling had been accumulated in pits and wells sunk in the floors of vaults in the Palace Zenana. The vaults are situated partially underground, daylight being admitted through narrow openings in the walls. After removing earth to a depth of 6ft. the workman uncovered a smooth, level pavement, of large flagstones. When these were lifted they came upon a square pit, filled to the brim with glittering silver. There were several such pits, two or three of them containing jewels; but the majority contained each about 15 lakhs of Gwalior rupees. In each pit was a copper plate, on which was engraved the amount of the contents and the name of the official who placed it there. As a rule only freshly coined rupees had been buried, and the secret had been entrusted to a few confidential servants. The money was dug up in Mr. Westland's presence, and shovelled into bags which were sent to the Calcutta Mint, in instalments of 80 lakhs each.

To unprejudiced observers it would seem obvious that the Regency has acted wisely in turning a portion of this buried treasure to remunerative use, while the Indian Government is certainly to be congratulated on having obtained a material guarantee of the fidelity of a great feudatory. The Native Press, however, seems to view the transaction with suspicion. The Sind Times, of Kurrachee, says it exposes the greedy impecuniosity of the Government, and adds that had the Maharajah been an adult he would never have invested his wealth in Indian securities. The Benqalee, of Calcutta, has no objection to the investment, but thinks that as Gwalior is now practically under the direction of the Indian Government the action of the Regency is liable to misrepresentation, for which the Government should not have afforded a pretext. The Subodha Prakash, of Bombay, considers it petty statesmanship, which is reduced to straits like these to obtain money. The Shivai, a Marathi newspaper, asks, "Why should the Government direct longing eyes to the hoardings of the Native States?" The Yezden Perast, a Gujarati weekly journal, says, "The Government has gone astray from the path of duty, attracted by a tempting offer." Comments to a similar effect might be multiplied.

The Government has published the details of the arrangement with Messrs. Cook and Sons, tourists' agent, for the conveyance of Indian pilgrims to Jeddah. First, second, and third-class tickets from Bombay to Jeddah, costing respectively 60, 40, and 30 rupees, can be purchased from any district officer in India, the return fares being half as much again. Messrs. Cook's agents will receive the pilgrims at Bombay and ship them. A Mahomedan doctor will accompany each steamer, and special arrangements will be made for ladies. Pilgrims may deposit cash and valuables with an agent at Bombay and draw them at Jeddah. The price of the return ticket will be repaid if a pilgrim determines to remain in Arabia to himself, or, if one should die en route, to his heirs. The arrangement is to last three years. The Government will guarantee the firm against actual loss up to £2,000 for the first year, and £1,000 in the following years. This scheme should be an immense boon to Indian Mahomedans, especially the poorer classes, many of whom now ship without sufficient money, trusting to charity to obtain food at Mecca and the means of returning.

Mazar Ali, the trooper of the Central India Horse who shot Major Neill on parade on March 14, has been convicted and sentenced to death. Sir Lepel Griffin, in confirming the sentence, reviewed at some length the evidence in support of the defence of insanity, which was founded mainly on a statement made by the prisoner after the crime, that he had acted in obedience to a Divine command. The general evidence of insanity was weak, and, as regards the particular delusion, Sir L. Griffin remarked that India is full of cruel, crime-inspiring delusions, held by large numbers of people who must be called sane, which delusions when carried into action should be treated as criminal. It was clear that Mazar Ali knew his act was contrary to law, and, therefore, his delusion could not be held to extenuate his atrocious crime. Sir L. Griffin accordingly confirmed the sentence.

It is announced that the Indian Government is actively taking up the cause of the decaying silk industry. A collection of Indian cocoons is being made, which will be sent to Manchester, where it will be open for inspection. Infected cocoons are to be sent to France for examination by M. Pasteur's pupils, who, it is hoped, will be able to suggest means for checking the disease which has nearly ruined the industry. The mercantile community has promised to co-operate.

The opium revenue for the current financial year is at present

Rs.9,97,000 below the estimate, there being a deficiency both in the Bengal opium sales and in the pass duty on the drug exported from Bombay.

The Government has confirmed the Nizam's nomination of Bushir-ed-Dowlah as Prime Minister of Hyderabad in succession to Salar Jung. The appointment is generally approved, as Bushir is not only one of the first two nobles of the State, but is also a man of fair ability, and is in sympathy with the Nizam. He is now in England, but will probably be recalled at once.

The announcement that Mr. Barbour, Financial Secretary to the Government, will succeed Sir A. Colvin as Finance Minister, has been received with satisfaction by the Indian Press and public.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, MAY 15.

Little trustworthy news has been received regarding the Ghilzai rebellion during the past week, but it is beyond doubt that the situation is critical, and that the reports of victories gained by the Ameer's troops, sent here about three weeks ago, were, to say the least, greatly exaggerated. It now appears that the Ghilzais, far from admitting that they were defeated by Gholam Hyder and Sikundar Khan, claim to have inflicted a severe check on both those officers. The fact that neither of them has again ventured to engage the rebels would seem to bear out this account. Further corroboration is supplied by the news that the Governor of Ghuzni has thought it advisable to send his family to Cabul, while their safe arrival at the capital would tend to show that the revolt has not extended northwards. The Governor of Candahar is said to be preparing against an attack on that city, but this report is not well authenticated. Another and more probable report is that he has lately been more successful in raising Durani recruits, and that reinforcements have been sent to Sikundar Khan. All was quiet at Cabul on the 29th of April, the date of the latest news. The Ameer had been suffering from gout, but was convalescent. Troops were being sent against the rebels, but the rumour that all his available force has been despatched is denied.

Fuller information has been received about the disturbances among the Shinwarri tribe. Towards the end of April the Ameer's officials attempted to collect the revenue in a manner which the tribesmen considered arbitrary and oppressive. Resistance was offered, whereupon the Jellalabad garrison was sent out to coerce them. Some fighting took place in the Shinwarri country, about 30 miles to the south of Jellalabad, and both sides claim the victory. General Gholam Hyder, the Ameer's commander-in-chief, is said to be trying to settle the difficulty. It should be noted that this Gholam Hyder is not the officer of the same name who commands one of the Ameer's forces operating against the Ghilzais. The trouble with the Shanwarris does not appear to be connected with the Ghilzai movement, but their simultaneous occurrence is most unfortunate. The cause in each case is the same—namely, oppressive taxation.

The Lahore Civil and Military Gazette states that some travellers who left Badakshan three weeks ago report that 500 Russian soldiers are encamped at Kolub, on the frontiers of Badakshan, and that these are engaged in buying supplies. They also say that Isbak Khan and Abdulla Jan, Governor of Badakshan, are intriguing for a Russian occupation of that province, and that Abdulla has sent word to Aman-ul-Mulk, ruler of Chitral, that a Russian army is about to march through his country to India, and that he must collect rations for it. These reports are, of course, very doubtful; but, as the newspaper which publishes them remarks, they show at least a dangerous confidence of the people of North-eastern Afghanistan in the power and activity of Russia.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 15.

The Meiktila and Kyankse districts of Upper Burma, lying east of the Irrawaddy, have for some time past been greatly disturbed by the ravages of dacoit bands. Intelligence has been received that Myat-Hmon, Maung-Gyi, Boh-Nga Lat and Min-Po, four noted dacoit leaders in those districts, with their followers, amounting to about two hundred men, have brought in their arms and surrendered. This surrender, which is mainly due to the exertions of Mr. Joseph, the Deputy-Commissioner, is very important, as it practically assures the peace of a very large tract of country. Employment of various kinds has been found for the four dacoit chiefs and their followers who have surrendered.

The liberal way in which the Government has dealt with these bands will probably induce other leaders who are now hesitating to come in.

A BOARD of Medical Officers has assembled at Mandalay to report on the nature and extent of the wound received at Hmawaing by Captain H. P. Airey, New South Wales Artillery. Captain Airey has had but a short stay on service, and will return to Australia almost immediately for recovery. He received a gunshot wound in the left arm.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

FRENCH CONCESSIONS IN BURMA.

(Rangoon Gazette.)

Amongst recent visitors to Rangoon is the ex Kyouk-myoun-Atwin Woon, one of the former Burmese Ministers, and son-in-law of the Tinedah Mingyee, and who since the dethronement of Theebaw has resided in Mandalay. He was educated in France, resided there for many years, and speaks French fluently. During Theebaw's reign he was well known as the leader of the anti-British party at the Burmese Court, and as the most prominent sympathiser with the French party in Mandalay, who regarded him as their special patron. He supported the various intrigues for securing the monopoly of Upper Burma for the French; which immediately preceded the invasion and conquest of the country. The ex-Minister's visit to Rangoon is in connection with an application he has made to Government for a concession to construct a steam tramway from Kyouk-myoun on the Irrawaddy to Shwebo, which will henceforward be one of our most important military stations. The distance is some twenty miles. The ex-Kyouk-myoun-Atwin Woon has visited the workshops of Mr. Darwood, who explained to him all matters in connection with the working of the Rangoon tramways. Although it may be desirable to encourage private enterprise in Upper Burma, it appears to us unadvisable to grant to private individuals concessions to construct railroads or tramways in Upper Burma, especially lines communicating with our military stations. Such lines ought to be constructed by the Government on some general plan. Their control and management should be retained by the Government, as they might be of great strategical importance, in case of war, or of an insurrectionary movement. The indignation which has been excited in England by the attempt to lease the Ruby Mines without offering them to public competition, will, we feel sure, prevent the Government from attempting to dispose of any concession in Upper Burma, to construct railways or tramways, without offering them fully and fairly to public competition. The past history of the Kyouk-myoun-Atwin Woon certainly gives him no claim for any unusual favour at the hands of the Government. Since the capture of Mandalay, his attitude has been one of tacit but unconcealed hostility to the Government, although he has condescended to receive a pension.

NATIVE PRINCES OUGHT TO EDUCATE THEMSELVES.

(Liberal.)

There must be something wrong in the management of Jodhpore in Rajpootana, as the petition of Munwat Chand Mull, Vakil of the Anwat State, abundantly discloses. The Political Agent, Colonel Powlett, is an official very well spoken of everywhere; but it seems that like many a brother officer of his he favours particular individuals who exercise arbitrary powers to the detriment of those against whom he is prepossessed. The Maharajah is without any power, and he is completely under a spell of terror of the official name. His affairs are governed by Maharajah Pertab Singh, his brother, who is a general favourite among the Europeans, whom he pleases by his taste for the turf, and whom he cannot displease in any way. Then, again, the State is managed by a durbar, which is virtually managed by Lala Hardayal Singh, a Punjabi, who is in the confidence of the Political Agent, though he is extremely unpopular among the Sirdars and Thakoor. The Maharajah had an assembly of the notables called together to protest against the high-handedness of the said Lala; resolutions were passed; the Prince and the Prime Minister backed them; but as soon as the political smelt of the affair, the combination vanished, and Maharajah collapsed altogether. That is nice, indeed! The papers before us disclose a state of things which passes belief. But we shall say once for all that it is something for which our Princes are wholly to blame. It is the result of ignorance and absence of progress. British India advances at a marvellous rate; the subjects of the Empress have come to understand their rights, and they know how to clamour for them. They have begun to set their own house in order, trying to introduce reforms social, moral, religious and political. It will take another decade to set up a higher standard of civilisation in their modes of thinking and living. While all this goes on in British India, our Native princes are exactly in the same position which they occupied under the Mogul. With the general progress of ideas they maintain a backward position all along. Education they dislike, and if some of them do take to it they learn to shoot, play at lawn-tennis and billiards, without cultivating even a decent acquaintance with Saraswati. Their palaces are the abodes of the same superstition which led to their collapse before the Mogul. Their zenanas are guarded with the same jealousy, and their notions about women have not improved. No wonder that they cannot sympathise with educated Natives; no wonder that it is getting so hard for them to govern their States; no wonder that the politicals have monopolised power and patronage. If this state of things continues, we may be sure the day will come when it will be impossible for Natives to manage their territories, when for the safety and happiness of their subjects it will be necessary to have English prime ministers. There can be no doubt that under an Englishman a State will be far better managed than under Indians whose only recommendation is their ignorance. That is the condition to which things are tending. It may be averted if Native princes begin from now to imbibe civilized notions and educate themselves to the best of their power. Education is the only remedy for this hopeless state of affairs. It is education that is wanted to lift Indian society—education that is wanted by prince and peasant alike. The masses want education in order that they may be industrious and law-abiding subjects, and the princes want education in order that they may govern well. The nobles' colleges that have been established here and there are a pure mockery. They should be put under efficient Native management. Politics should be entirely banished from their scope, and an intellectual education, supplemented by moral training of a high order, should be aimed at. Unless this be done we predict for all our Native States a slow and gradual downfall and—annexation. Is there no Prince enlightened enough and statesmanlike enough to understand these things? There is no time to be lost, and (the reform) ought to be begun at once.

THE SITUATION IN AFGHANISTAN.

The news from Afghanistan is serious enough, but as compared with the rumours afloat on the frontier it is of the mildest kind. Taking the latter first: at Bannu, the correspondent of the Pioneer telegraphs, it is currently reported that the Ghilzais have advanced in force against Cabul itself, and that the Amir has fled! At Peshawur a report of the actual death of Abdur Rahman has, in the usual course of thing, been circulated in the local bazaar. At Quetta rumour speaks of the fall of Kelat-i-Ghilzai and hostile demonstrations against Kandahar. The actual facts show how misleading these rumours are. News from Cabul, dated so late as the 5th instant, has reached Peshawur, according to which all was quiet at the capital, though the Amir had begun to show marked signs of uneasiness at the gatherings of the Ghilzais. Regarding the progress of the insurrection about Kelat-i-Ghilzai the Allahabad paper learns by telegraph from Quetta that the Hotak Ghilzais have scored another success, having attacked and killed the Governor of Maruf, who was on his way to assist the Kandahar troops in dispersing the insurgents. Nothing is said of Kelat having been attacked. It seems beyond doubt that the Southern Ghilzais have gathered in large numbers, but we still have not heard that the powerful Northern clans have revolted, no hostile gatherings being reported in Laghman, Tezin, or the Shutar-gardan districts. The Amir may have hesitated to march in any force to Ghazni from fear of a revolt in these districts, but unless his own well-armed troops prove treacherous, he can still afford to be confident of the result. Ghazni, Kelat-i-Ghilzai, and Kandahar are all strong fortresses; and the Ghilzais, without even the smallest field guns, can scarcely hope to capture them by storm. What the Amir has most to fear is treachery on the part of the garrisons; but he has shown himself so strong and stern a ruler that but few men will care to run the risk of playing the part of traitors now. The Ghilzais, for their credit's sake, will probably meet the Cabul troops in action soon; but unless the revolt is very widespread, indeed, they can scarcely hope to be successful. They may cut up detachments, as they have done in the case of the Governor of Maruf, but in any regular action they will be sorely handicapped against the Amir's artillery and breech-loaders.

A telegram from Bannu to an up-country paper states that there has been some fighting in the Ghazni district, but no details are given. The Ghilzais, who seem to have plenty of confidence, are said to have offered the throne to a local Mullah. The man refused on religious grounds, but advised them to make Mir Alam Khan (son of the late Mushk-i-Alam) the Ghilzai Amir. Mir Alam headed the rebellion last year, and is known to have great influence about Ghazni, owing to the prominent part played by his father at Cabul in December, 1879. If the insurrection takes a fanatical turn, the son of Mushk-i-Alam may be able to gather a respectable force wherewith to try his fortune.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

(Englishman.)

The thought has struck a good many people who had given their attention to the subject that a considerable impulse might be given to the promotion of art in India if the authorities would completely overturn their way of encouraging it. One effect of the caste system has been to preserve the genius for art in certain groups of families, and to extinguish all tastes for it in the rest of the population. Hence have been handed down for generations the secrets of those marvellous productions in clay, wood, metal, and cotton, which are the wonder of Europe, but which are fast dying out under the levelling influence of modern civilisation. Now our "Departments" go to work to develop art by taking a youth whose forefathers have been accountants since the Aryan invasion, and offering him a grand prize to take lessons in modelling. He can give the ratio of the circumference of a circle to its diameter in decimals, but the exact difference in shape between a cube and a globe does not strike his eye. However, he is in-finely encouraged, and at length produces a shape which is submitted to a distinguished architect or engineer. A year or two afterwards this official, rendered amiable by a notice in the Gazette, reports that the specimen is better than the average work of beginners in some art schools in England, but not as good as that in others. The boy gets his prize and is promoted. Meanwhile another boy presents himself and asks for bakhshish, showing a curious thing he has made of mud under a tree in his village. He is persuaded with offers of bakhshish to stay in the art-school and study. He stays, but soon gives it up, and is pronounced incapable. He can do wonders in spherical geometry and conic sections with a lump of clay, but cannot take in the simplest idea of straight lines and angles. He has begun with curved lines. He also prefers using his eyes on the lump in his hands to taking lessons in measurement, so he is offered good wages for the work he does, but is told he cannot be advanced in his art unless he qualifies for the Entrance examination. He lives to an old age, drawing ten rupees a month to the last, and blessing the Government for setting up art schools in his country. The attempt has been made time without number to induce Indian artizan to impart their secrets to a class of students, but they will not do so. They are as proud of their caste as a Brahman is of his, and money cannot tempt them to make it common. But if a plan were devised for stealing an intellectual march on the sons of these geniuses in art, so as to expand their minds without taking them away from the hut which comprises their father's studio, it seems to us that more than one valuable secret, which are in danger of dying with the next generation, might be secured to civilisation. The plan would be expensive, but by no means too expensive, and it would, of course, have to be entirely irregular. All thought of departmental examinations, educational codes, and inspectors' visits would have to be abandoned. The boy should be quietly beguiled into learning to read his own vernacular, without either himself or his parent dreaming that he was ever to be anything else than a maker of figures. It might be impracticable to go any further with that boy, but he would beget a son, and ours is a persistent Government. So the son might be led on from reading to thinking as he sat toiling away in his grandfather's mud hut with the thermometer at 120° and no shade. Now once get an Indian artizan to think, and the game is won.

THE HALF-WAY HOUSE.

I know them of old—I've been here before—
And seen the procession pass,
And I've joined the crowd that was rolling up
But then I was young—and an ass!
They have not changed much, since the years ago;
But I've often read in books,
That a man is as old as he feels—you know—
And a woman—as old as she looks!
The subaltern jostles the grey "Qui-hye"
(Of Council he may be a Member),
And la vieille coquette goes hurrying by,
Like June disguising December;
All hurrying—some for promotion or place—
And some, over-burdened with leisure—
These last will not be behind in the race,
Though only pursuing their pleasure.
And my Lady Disdain will condescend
To a mild six months' flirtation
For her husband's sake—he is left in the plains
The last white man in the station:
But he knows his work is worth less than her wiles.
(There's really no harm to the heart meant),
So she'll gain his step by bestowing her smiles
On the Head of his Department!
Tis noon, and I came here at five in the morn,
The curtain I soon must drop,
Tho' I still hear the sound of the tonga horn
And still hear the wheels; but stop!
That youth over there his attention gives
To the girl? no, it must be to the other;
For in these days, you know, the young blood who lives
Finds it safer—to flirt with the mother!
L'ENVOI.
So the tongas take up what the gharris disgorge,
All is grist that can come to this mill;
And none give a thought—why should they, by George?—
To the Man at the Foot of the Hill.

WHEAT ADULTERATION.

(Times of India.)

The subject of wheat adulteration in India is attracting a large measure of public attention, the vexed questions in connection therewith having been reopened by a long and exhaustive note penned by Mr. Donald Smeaton on the occasion of his vacating the post of Director of Agriculture in the North-West Provinces and Oudh for an appointment in Burma. This document makes some direct charges against certain merchant-exporters at Bombay and Calcutta, and several gentlemen engaged in the trade in the latter city have already essayed to break a lance with Mr. Smeaton, whose imputations they warmly repudiate. The matter stands thus. That Indian wheat contains a large and preventible admixture of impurities is universally admitted; that this is in considerable measure due to wilful adulteration seems conclusively proved. Now, there are four classes of men who have to do with the wheat produce—the cultivators, the Native merchants who act as intermediaries, the European shippers, and the London buyers; and the controversy is at present being waged on the lines that each one of these groups is endeavouring to shift the blame to the shoulders of their neighbours. First it is the ignorant ryot with bad seed and imperfect methods that is pointed out as the delinquent; next we hear the astute up-country Native trader accused of doctoring the wheat up to the standard of impurity recognized in the trade and very often a little over; then we find the English exporter charged with being ever on the alert to obtain an unfair percentage of clean wheat to impurities, the "rectification" of which will give him an extra profit; and lastly, the whole wrong-doing is laid at the door of the London buyer, who is represented as stolidly persisting in knocking off five per cent. for "dirt," however pure the shipment may be. All this shows that the Indian wheat trade is, to call a spade a spade, in a thoroughly demoralised state. It seems very much as if cultivators, dealers, exporters, and buyers are all playing a game at which each one is perfectly aware that his neighbours are trying to sharp him while he is avowedly and unblushingly doing his utmost to sharp them. But the evil is even of wider bearing. Indian wheat is liable to be discredited in European markets, its impurities become spoken of as ineradicable, and though despite this drawback great progress has been made in the past we cannot but be in some measure handicapped as compared with our American competitors. To everyone, therefore, interested in the progress of India the wilful adulteration of such an important article of export becomes a question of burning interest, and the charges brought forward by Mr. Smeaton deserve the most careful investigation.

In the first place, the system under which the trade is at present conducted calls for a few words of explanation. Prices are invariably struck on the basis of a five per cent. refraction, and the fact is known to all who engage in the business. If the wheat when delivered to the merchant-exporter shows impurities greater than five per cent., the excess up to seven per cent. is deducted from the seller's invoice, while if the impurities are over seven per cent. the buyer has the option of refusing the consignment. Thus, when an up-country trader strikes a bargain with a Bombay merchant for delivery of 500 maunds of wheat at a certain price, this price it is understood by both parties, is really for 475 maunds of pure wheat and 25 maunds of "dirt." This interesting fact needs no amplification. It is on the face of it a direct incentive to the country dealer to adulterate the wheat, and according to Mr. Smeaton he does so probably in nine cases out of ten. He knows that if he does not supply an admixture of "dirt" and inferior grain up to the five per cent. limit, the Bombay shipper will, and thereby the latter will get for nothing so many maunds that will pass with judicious mixing for Indian wheat in London. This is a serious charge, but Mr. Smeaton brings book and text to prove it. In June, 1886, three bags of old wheat belonging to a Native agent of a well-known Bombay firm were seized in Muzaffarnagar by order of the magistrate. Samples were sent to the local medical officer, and by him the wheat was pronounced to be quite unfit for human food. "The agent," writes Mr. Smeaton, "on examination by the magistrate, stated that he had bought 54 maunds of the condemned grain, and had used it for mixing with other wheat in the proportion of about one to ten. He added that before doing so he had reported to his employers that he was unable to buy wheat for them at the rate which they had allowed unless he was permitted to mix old wheat with new; and that he sent a sample of the mixture for approval. The agent produced copies of correspondence before the magistrate, which showed that the Bombay firm had approved of the sample and ordered their up-country branch to purchase accordingly. The agent further stated that the wheat he used for mixing was purchased by him at 33 seers per rupee, at a time when good wheat was selling at from 16 to 18 seers per rupee." Comment on such a flagrant case is superfluous, and Mr. Smeaton may well ask "if a large European export firm gave its sanction to an admixture of ten per cent. of rotten grain pronounced by medical authority to be unfit for human food with good wheat for the Bombay market, what wonder is it that Native dealers in the interior follow the example?" Moreover, the evil comes to have extensive ramifications. Mr. Smeaton holds it as "confirmed by undoubted testimony" that the country dealers bribe underlings at the shipping ports to certify as coming up to the prescribed standard consignments of wheat considerably more heavily adulterated than to the 5 per cent. limit; and that shippers, particularly when the market is falling, resort to similar dishonest means to get bargains taken off their hands on the plea that the seven per cent. proportion of impurities is exceeded. These statements are not our own, but Mr. Smeaton's. Some of the Calcutta merchants have come forward to defend themselves; their Bombay brethren may follow suit. However, apart from the question whether or not Mr. Smeaton's case is completely made out, it is abundantly clear that there is great mutual distrust between the up-country dealers and the shippers, and that constant efforts are being put forward on both sides to over-reach each other. To the general public the all-important consideration is that the wheat of India leaves the country in a most discreditable state of impurity. In this connection, we may supplement Mr. Smeaton's arguments by a fact recently brought to light by an expert in Bombay in regard to the very fine wheat known as white peasi grown in the Nerbudda Valley and Chattisgarh. When this wheat leaves the cultivator it is pure to the extent of 96 per cent., and, if shipped in this condition, it would undoubtedly take a foremost place at home. But the European export houses in Bombay contract with the Native dealers for something other than the pure article, with the result that this wheat leaves for England pure only to the extent of 80 per cent., with 16 per cent. of inferior qualities of grain, straw, peas, and chaff, and four per cent. of pure mud deliberately mixed with it. Such a system of trade must be rotten to the core.

BENGAL.

THE Municipal Corporation of Calcutta have sanctioned the distribution of Rs. 25,000 to their Engineering staff, as bonuses in connection with the completion of the new main of the water supply. Mr. Kimber, the Engineer, gets Rs. 10,000; the heirs of the late Mr. Fenwick, Assistant Engineer, a similar amount; and the balance Rs. 5,000, is to be divided between the other employees concerned.

A Calcutta paper is of opinion that there is likely to be a great run of temporary promotion in the Civil Service of Lower Bengal this year:—"When every available furlough has been taken, the charge of districts will be held during the hot weather by officers who had not aspired to fill such posts for two or three years to come. If anything like the usual proportion of men take privilege leave, we shall have acting Collectors of eight and nine years' service, quite a reminiscence of the 'good old times.' The Commissioners of Dacca, Burdwan and Orissa are all reported to be going on short leave; so the grey beards as well as the beardless should get their chance."

The Englishman says:—"It is our firm belief that if the Government looked properly into the sale and consumption of salt in Calcutta and its environs, the revenue would receive such an accession that the income-tax might be abolished. Formerly the storage and sale of salt in Calcutta was supervised by a special department under the Commissioner of Police. This department was abolished in 1865, the duties performed by it devolving on the regular police; and it was, we presume, left on record that after the lapse of a few years an inquiry should be made as to whether the change had been attended with good or evil results. If the Government would take the trouble to inquire how much salt was sold and consumed in Calcutta in 1864, and compare it with the quantity now known to be sold or consumed therein, it would at once understand the real state of affairs. As the population of Calcutta has considerably increased since 1865, it is certain that the quantity of salt consumed must be much larger now than then."

BOMBAY.

THE subscriptions paid into the Bank of Bombay to the Rukhmibai, Defence Fund now amounts to Rs. 2,680.

MAJEN BISCOE, the Examiner of Guaranteed Railway Accounts, Bombay, owing to ill-health, is compelled to proceed on six months' leave to England.

THE Government of India have just made a very acceptable present to the Nizam of Hyderabad of ten pairs of magnificent mules. These mules were purchased at the recent Rawal Pindi Horse Fair for Rs. 1,000 per pair.

THE Thakores of Morvi, Limbdi and Wadhwan leave for England by the mail steamer of the 6th proximo, with the object of being present at the celebration of the Jubilee of Her Majesty's reign. Colonel Wodehouse, Political Agent in Kathiawar, accompanies them on special duty.

In addition to his duties as a member of the Nizam's deputation to Her Majesty, Sirdar Diler-ul-Mulk, says the Secunderabad paper, is to settle with the Board of Directors the question regarding the rate at which the debentures taken from the Railway Company by his Highness's Government are to be given. The Government claims to be allowed to purchase them at fifteen or twenty per cent. discount, the rates at which they were originally placed in the market at home, though they are now at par or above it. The Directors, however, want their full pound of flesh, and as it has been found impossible to settle the question by correspondence, the Sirdar is being deputed to England to obtain fair terms for the Government.

THE Times of India says:—"There is an astonishing rumour abroad, i.e., that Government actually propose to appoint a member of the Covenanted Civil Service to be Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department. Such an appointment would be a grave injustice. It would stop one step all through the Bombay Public Works Department, in which promotion is already incredibly bad and the pay out of all proportion poor in comparison with the intellectual and educational attainments of the men. It would, further, take away the only prize in the department. It would still further enforce the retirement of every single colonel who happens to become a major-general: in fact, it is such an extraordinary proposal that we could hardly believe that Government really contemplate it, were it not for what we know the Government propose to do with the Chief Presidency magistracy."

ONE of the Native papers gave currency a few days ago to a report that Mr. Shamrao Laud had resigned the appointment of Dewan of Cambay. The report is untrue; there is nothing in the Dewan's relations with his Nawab on the one hand, or with the Bombay Government on the other, which gives ground for any such statement.

SOME TIME ago Krishna, wife of Luxmon Gungajee, was convicted by Mr. H. J. Parsons, Sessions Judge of Dhana, of the murder of her own child, and was sentenced to death. There were extenuating circumstances in the case. She was turned out of her husband's house, and was starving with the child when she murdered it. The High Court, when the sentence came up before it for confirmation, commuted it to transportation for life. On the recommendation of the Judges of the Court, the Bombay Government have now reduced the sentence to one of five years' rigorous imprisonment.

A TREASURE chest in charge of two soldiers was being sent from Pangim to Ponda. The clerk who accompanied it was detained on some business, and when he arrived at the bunder where he expected to meet the party he found, to his utter surprise, that the guard and the money had disappeared altogether. The police are in search of the thieves.

It is reported that the owners of the Hall Line of steamers have offered to construct new steamers on most modern principles, and to alter and improve the steamers now running, provided the agreement with the North-Western Railway, under which two of the steamers leave Kurrachee, is extended to a term of five years. There is every reason to believe the Government will sanction the arrangement.

MR. HARI NARAYAN SOMNEY, late translator to his Highness the Gaekwar, is the author of an acrostic ode, "Victoria," composed in honour of the Jubilee. We append its opening verse:—

"Vast is thy might and power, Oh! thou Verified Personification of Virtue and all the Vested rights of Honour, and immaculate Truth!

For, thou standest on the vantage ground of Humanity;
And Vanquishest all that approach the Venue of thy Virtuous influence,

And Inspirest them with an aversion for their deeds of Vice and Vanity, as fraught with Vexation of spirit."

MADRAS.

THE Salvationists in Madras are having a lively time of it. The other night, while they were holding a service in barracks, Popham's Broadway, three rotten eggs were thrown into the barracks. The service terminated abruptly. On Tuesday night, during service, a brickbat was thrown in, and the mussalchee, who was set to watch, seized a young Chinaman. Handed over to the police he was called upon to pay Rs. 2 as the price of his frolic.

THE case of Morgan v. Morgan and Chas. Palmer came up again for hearing at Madras on the 19th inst. before the Hon. Mr. Justice Trevelyan. The Court asked Mr. Pugh to reply. He stated that he had no doubt whatever that adultery had been committed by the respondent and co-respondent, and that he could not find that there was any proof of adultery having been committed by the petitioner, and on these lines Mr. Pugh would shape his reply. His lordship said he would have to deal with the case on the evidence of the petitioner, and accepting the whole of it. Mr. Pugh then proceeded to recapitulate the facts of the case, as brought out by the petitioner's evidence. He contended that throughout the petitioner's conduct had always been such as a kind and considerate husband would have shown towards his wife. He evinced every desire to contribute to her comfort when he left her in England. Mr. Pugh submitted that his leaving her in England did not constitute desertion, a point in which the Court concurred. Mr. Pugh laid great stress on the fact of the respondent having, after her arrival in Calcutta, written a letter to the petitioner, saying she was quite capable of earning her own living, and required no further assistance from him. It would be for his Lordship to decide whether, under the circumstances, petitioner was not justified in subsequently refusing to live with her. There was nothing to show upon what terms they were living at this time, as all the letters in the possession of petitioner disappeared after her visit to his steamer, and the other side produced no letters either. There was no evidence to show that she had ever written to him, asking to be received back. It was in evidence that she kept copies of other letters she had written to petitioner, and it was therefore highly improbable that she had not kept copies of any letters of such importance. The evidence tended to prove conclusively that she went down to Rangoon with the object of intimidating the petitioner, who was very much in her power, having twice been suspended on her account. Upon the evidence Mr. Pugh submitted to his lordship that the deed having been signed, and they were living separate by mutual consent, the respondent had no grounds whatever for her plea of desertion. Mr. Pugh held that the separation being mutual, and the fact of her receiving a subsequent allowance was a sufficient bar to her plea of desertion. After their interview at Rangoon, respondent continued to receive an allowance of Rs. 200 per mensem, until the petitioner was informed of her manner of living in Calcutta, when the allowance was stopped. Though the deed in question might not be quite in form, he paid the money under the deed, and she received it under the deed, although no doubt living for a considerable time in open adultery with the co-respondent, himself a married man. With regard to the question of damages, Mr. Pugh considered his learned friend's, Mr. Hill's, arguments in this connection were fallacious, as they rested on decisions in cases dating many years back. This was hardly a case for heavy damages, but he thought if the fact of the husband and wife living apart was considered sufficient to justify a co-respondent stepping in under this plea, and debauching the wife, it would be creating a very dangerous precedent. He would leave it with the Court to decide the damages, but in passing judgment, he would ask his Lordship to settle the question of the custody of the child as he thought it would be to the last degree disastrous to leave a young child in the custody of such a mother. His Lordship said that if he granted the petition for dissolution of marriage the custody of the child would naturally be given to the petitioner. The Court took time to consider this case before passing judgment.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, AND PUNJAB.

The Sub-Committee of the Public Commission continues its sittings at Lahore. The police department and accounts departments have been gone into, evidence having been given by Mr. J. M. Andrew, Deputy Inspector-General, and Mr. Thurton Smith for the police, and Messrs. Egerton, Monrowd, Bessly, and Aldford for the accounts.

ALL the girders of the Jhelum Bridge up to pier sixteen are in position. Two only remain to be erected. The span between piers sixteen and seventeen is giving some trouble, on account of the rising of the river, and the deep scour which has set in towards that shore, to resist which large quantities of stone were being thrown in.

NATIVE PRESS.

LAW VERSUS NATURAL INSTINCTS AND HUMAN CONSCIENCE.

Rukhmabai's case is an illustration how heavily a girl may be punished for what, after all, is only very natural in the case of a young girl, a dislike to live with a person she does not care for. We cannot say that the punishment has not been too severe, and that Rukhmabai's case is not a hard one. Our instincts must necessarily revolt against a contract under such circumstances as came to light in her case. But we suppose law must be held supreme, and natural instincts and human conscience stifled for its sake, and that anomalies, however outrageous, must be for a time tolerated, if only for the sake of social traditions, which are, after all, the backbone of a nation. What we have said to-day is only to direct the attention of our readers to the rule, as regards impuberes, laid down by the Romans, whether the same rule may or may not be applied to child-marriage in this country. If, however, we proceeded on the basis that marriage was only a contract, and nothing more, it would be difficult to persuade our people that the religious element was not the most important one. The result of discussion on any other basis would inevitably be nothing. We must walk slowly if we want to make headway. A rush often means a fall. We fully appreciate the sentiment of Bentham when he says that "to live under the perpetual authority of a man whom one detests is slavery, and to be obliged to receive his caresses is too great an evil to be tolerated even in slavery. It has often been said that the yoke is reciprocal; but reciprocity only doubles the misfortune." But Hindu society is not in a state now to go so far as to say that marriage is only a contract voidable at all, although, at times, we see that cruel injustice is the natural consequence of a strict application of law to old customs, and that life-long misery may be the penalty for a technical crime.—Indian Mirror.

VILLAGE MAMLATDAR.

The Guzerat Mitra.—The Mamlatdar can do anything he likes in the region assigned to him, for he thinks himself monarch of that region. If he encamps at a village with his retinue, the poor, the illiterate, ignorant, and frank villagers flock to him to pay homage. He gets milk, mutton, spice, rice, ghee, butter, and, in fact, everything from them, even men to shampoo him. He orders his men to bring milk from the villagers, and if he is not pleased to find it good, he at once sends for a buffalo or a cow of a villager and gets it milked before his presence. Do you know why villagers give away their property to the Mamlatdar? It is simply because they fear that they are sure to be visited by his anger. They do not know where to lodge their complaint of grievances, and they have not the means to do it. Again the Mamlatdar's servants have got this idea into their heads, that villagers are bound to supply them also with every necessary article of food. We have described above the grievances of the villages. Now we propose to describe a much more serious grievance. The combination of the Judicial and Magisterial duties is a sort of long standing nuisance. It is an evil that has reached its highest pitch. It is the cause of many grievances; most of the forest grievances result from it. To it also can be assigned the reason of Abkhari woes; and, what is more, it is the greatest stumbling-block in the way of the progress of the local self-government.

PARSEES AND HINDUS.

One of the worst forms of misdirected energy was exemplified last week in the complaint that there are too many Parsees in Government employ at Surat. This estimate has been effectively contradicted. But even if it were correct, either for Surat or elsewhere, we fail to see how our Hindu friends could make a grievance over it. If there are too many Parsees in one place there are too many Hindus in more places than one. In this matter we rather feel for the Mahomedans, whose foolish pride has so long stood in the way of their adapting themselves to the needs of modern citizenship. We think there are only two ways of looking at this question of employment in the public service. First, that the Government, as such, ought to take up the very best hands out of the best that are available, departing from the standard only in exceptional cases. We may remark here, in passing, that the intellectual test is by no means the only test for this purpose. And, secondly, that though Hindus ought to have a large proportion of the employments, as we believe they have, they cannot fairly claim a monopoly of the loaves and fishes of office, nor even demand that they should be employed exactly in proportion to their numbers. With number the State has to take into account educated intelligence and moral and physical fitness. The first requisite for a Government servant is to be able to inspire respect and confidence amongst the people. No amount of college education in itself can give this, nor can birth or wealth or bodily strength alone. Now a monopoly of all these best qualities will not be claimed for any particular class. Hindus excel Parsees in some matters, as in others Parsees excel Hindus. In the aggregate we should think a given number of Hindu servants show about the same result as a similar number of Parsi servants.—Indian Spectator.

MATRIMONIAL MARKETS IN BOMBAY AND CALCUTTA.

A correspondent signing himself "Brahma" says:—Permit me to say a few words in connection with the dower system of Bombay and Calcutta. The Bengalis cry in their newspaper columns that the matters about marriages are going from bad to worse. I must say for Bombay that here they are becoming worst. A correspondent in Calcutta writes:—"Bridegrooms are now quite as marketable a commodity as the necessities of life." I thoroughly sympathise with the writer in his remarks. In Bengal a Matriculate is worth Rs. 400, in Bombay he is worth 1,000; in Bengal an F.A. is worth 1,000 and B.A. 4,000. I do not know the exact quotations at which the Bombay market of bridegrooms will dispose of its undergraduates and graduates. The days are hard with the poor people. They are unable, under the circumstances, to secure husbands for their girls, unless they sacrifice all their means of living. Is this the 19th century civilisation of India? What for is your political agitation, what for your lectures and addresses and social reforms? Let all these go to the dogs, if you cannot improve your homes—homes where alone you can find consolation for awhile. All this mischief would never have occurred if the marriageable age would not have been limited. Girls must be married between eight and ten! This is the evil—a deplorable circumstance. The matters will be all right if girls will be allowed to marry at an advanced age. Parents would thereby not be compelled to get the daughters married at so enormous an expenditure." The facts mentioned in this letter are latent, and bespeak the bitter experience of many a Hindu parent cursed with daughters in this accursed age. The only source of relief must come from a deliberate change in the existing customs; but the present temper of even "educated" society is against such change, and, indeed, against giving any serious thought to the subject.—Subodha Patrika.

THE memorial to the late Sir Arthur Phayre is to take the shape of a bronze statue, with a handsome pedestal, the figure not to be less than 7 feet high, and to be executed by one of the most eminent sculptors of the day. This will give to Rangoon a work of artistic merit, besides being a very suitable memorial of Sir Arthur Phayre. Several of the original subscribers having this object in view have offered to double their donations, and the Phayre Memorial Committee hope that this example will be followed by others.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

LADY BURTON'S "ARABIAN NIGHTS."*

Lady Burton has now completed the fourth instalment of her expurgated edition of the "Arabian Nights." The present volume is very similar to its predecessors as regards the style of the tales of which it is composed, save that it deals largely with proselytism. "There is no God but the God" is the burden of many an act of heroism. Especially is this the case in the story of Gharil and his brother Ajib, depicting "the rollicking, violent brigand-like life" of a warrior, who in childhood fell into the hands of the Arabs, and being instructed by them in the faith of the Prophet, became an ardent enthusiast in the matter of religion, and, like the Saracens of old, carried "Al Islam" at the point of the sword amidst the many climes and regions which fell beneath his conquering sway.

This further instalment is also remarkable, in so far that there is a solitary instance of a woman who is free from the taint of perfidy and guile, so general in all works of fiction which emanate from the East. In the instance in question, a choice is set before a daughter of Eve whether she would select "the Commander of the Faithful, with his honour and glory and dominions, and palaces and treasures, and all else thou seest at his command," or one of the Khalif's high officers "with his violence and tyranny," or her husband "with his hunger and poverty?" The answer is worthy of her sex in its proudest and most heroic moments. "By Allah, O Commander of the Faithful!"—such were the glowing words of a devoted spouse—"I will not forsake him for the shifts of Fortune or the perfidies of Fate, there being between us old companionship we may not forget, and love beyond stay and let; and, indeed, 'tis but just that I bear with him in his adversity even as I shared with him in prosperity." What a noble character to find in the midst of the low, cunning, intriguing representatives of the weaker sex which disfigure the pages of the "Arabian Nights!"

As to the Notes by Sir Richard Burton, it is only necessary to say that the high standard of excellence reached in the previous volumes is in every way maintained on the present occasion. Praise exhausts itself in futile efforts to do justice to their merits.

WOODLAND TALES†

There is a wonderful charm in Dr. Stinde's tales. Even when translated, as in this instance, into a foreign tongue, they have a freshness and simplicity which in these days of sensational novels, of "She's," and the such-like, are gratifying tokens that there are at least some readers who have not bent the knee in adoration of the brazen image of unreality—not infrequently with a touch of indelicacy to impart additional continued attraction and zest. The author of the "Buchholz Family" possesses the art of lending to the everyday scenes of life an air of attractiveness and a charm of interest. The simplest action, the commonest scene, the lowliest flower, each and all afford him an opportunity of appealing to the better instincts of mankind. His tales breathe an air of tenderness always effective, at times most touching; they hold the place in Germany which was for many years filled by Miss Edgeworth's stories in this country; and yet, withal, there is but little, if any, of the "goody-goody" about them. Their strength and worth are derived from the insight into human nature revealed at every turn. There are no dogmatic moral preachings, but the veil is drawn aside which conceals man's sight from his motives. This done, the lesson seems to stand forth to the eye naturally and without pretension.

What, then, is this lesson of life which Dr. Stinde desires to impress upon a selfish, thoughtless, giddy world, enwrapped in a shroud of personal gratification and individual self-indulgence. It is just this—that the pivot upon which human happiness revolves is love—love for others, love which can concentrate all its efforts in an attempt to soften the hardships of life and assuage the bruises of time; love which finds experience in a gentle word, love which delights to do a kind action; love which can speak peace to the outcast, and fill the widow's heart with joy; love which breaks through the conventionalities of society, and stands forth pure, unsullied, and without blemish; love which imparts to man the attributes of his Creator. These most charming tales are all founded on homely scenes of everyday life; and to the reader we would say, cast aside for an hour the cloak of unrest, which is the heritage of this nineteenth-century existence, and bask awhile in the sunshine of genuine unalloyed pleasure—chit-chat with the creation of Dr. Stinde's imagination—and be happy.

THE ROSE GARDEN OF PERSIA‡

Few persons qualified to speak on the subject will question the soundness of Mrs. Costello's assertion that "the softest and the richest language in the world is the Persian;" fewer still will dispute that "it is so peculiarly adapted to the purposes of poetry." But it might have been added that it is the most untranslatable tongue which it is possible to conceive. This circumstance arises principally from the difficulty of finding suitable equivalents for the compound words in which the speech of the people of Iran abounds. Hence an epithet, which in the original is superbly sweet and effective, falls flat and dull upon the ears of those who are compelled to trust to an intermediary rendering. Further, there is the absolute hopelessness of reproducing the balanced and rhythmical sentences which are so largely the attraction of Persian poetry, and which, indeed, even as regards prose, lend a charm quite beyond the conception of the prosaic West. Readers of Lady Burton's new edition of her husband's edition of the "Arabian Nights" can form their own opinion as to the utter impossibility of conveying in English any idea of the beauty of a mellifluous and harmonised language such as enchants the Arab of the desert or the wanderer in Shiraz.

That Mrs. Costello should seek to open to the public this mine so rich in wealth, and transport to the West the pleasures of the East, is natural and commendable. That from a critical point of view she should fail to attain a full measure of success is only another way of saying that she has not learnt the art of accomplishing the impossible. But if truth compels this ungallant severity, it equally forces an acknowledgment that, viewed merely as a volume of English poetic effusions, inspired by a perusal of the chef d'œuvres of Persian song, it has much to commend it. The "Profession of Faith," in imitation of "Omar Khayyam," and the soliloquy of "Zulaika after Jarni"—especially the latter—are sweet, graceful, and replete with fire. The slight sketches of the lives of the various poets are also carefully prepared and popularly written, added to which—and we speak from personal experience in this matter—they possess the further merit of accuracy. As to the "illuminations" which grace the volume at every turn, praise must exhaust itself. They are beautifully executed, and while brilliant in effect and pleasing to the eye, they are faithful reproductions of Persian art. Taken as a whole Mrs. Costello must be congratulated upon her efforts to find a new pleasure for a world blasé in literature and wearied with sensationalism, and if she has succeeded in affording merely a glimpse at the beauty of the originals which have won her admiration the "Rose Garden of Persia" will not have appeared in vain.

THE EMINENT WOMEN SERIES—"MRS. SIDDONS"*

Mrs. Kennard, still adhering to the biographies of actresses, has followed up her excellent "Life of Rachel" in this popular Series by that, now before us, of "the great" Siddons. The renowned Sarah is, in truth, a character well worthy of study, whether as actress or as woman. In the former capacity, the theatrical career of a lady, well styled the "Queen of Tragedy," who was, at different times, a member of David Garrick's company, and of one comprising the elder Kean and Macready, and who at one period enjoyed almost a monopoly of the higher female rôles, cannot fail to command general interest; while, as filling what Mr. Micawber called "the tripartite capacity of woman, wife, and mother," she stands out as one of the very few actresses against whom not even stage gossip had a word to cast.

Born in 1755, at Brecon, Sarah Kemble, the child of a strolling player, Roger Kemble, shared the somewhat Bohemian life of her parents, and one of the earliest anecdotes preserved concerning her is that of her "standing, when a girl, at the wing of a country theatre, beating snuffers against a candlestick, to represent the sound of a windmill in some rude pantomime." Her mother's hauteur and sternness were, in Sarah, but little tempered by the bonhomie which was apparently the chief characteristic of her father, and seem to have been more or less of a stumbling-block to her through life.

That she eventually married a subordinate member of her father's little company is, perhaps, not surprising, though she had received offers from persons in a far higher rank of life; and her marriage, at the age of eighteen, undoubtedly contributed in a great degree to shield her from many of the temptations to which a beautiful and rising young actress is especially exposed.

Siddons herself seems to have been an actor of somewhat more than ordinary merit, but too inclined to grasp at the highest possible gain derivable from the marvellous abilities of the woman who had, perhaps too confidently, thrown herself away on him. At the same time, it is fair to admit that her surpassing talents were slow in reaching their full development. Mrs. Kennard, in the course of one of the comparisons which she institutes between Mrs. Siddons, the subject of her present, and Rachel, the subject of her last, contribution to this Series, points out that "Rachel reached the summit of her power at seventeen, Mrs. Siddons not until thirty."

From the date, 1775, when, in the last year of Garrick's management of Drury Lane, Mrs. Siddons, as a member of the great actor's company, made her first appearance on London boards, her career is open to the "fierce glare of publicity"; and we are the less disposed to enlarge on it, because it is so readably set forth in this little work. That she complained of Garrick on account of a failure, in her first appearances, which was doubtless in the main attributable to her own inexperience, that she quitted London for provincial theatres, and returned to it only when, under Sheridan's brief but disastrous management, she undertook (and created for all time) the part of Lady Macbeth—a most interesting analysis of which, from her own pen, will be found at pp. 120-123—we are not only told, but told in such a manner as to show us the inward promptings which brought about her action in each case.

Not a few readers will reckon the peculiarities of Mrs. Siddons' character, as illustrated by her relations with her family and friends, among the most interesting and instructive passages in the work. She seems to have concealed, under a mask of hauteur, a real craving for human sympathy and affection; allowing this sometimes (and, in one case, that of the Galindos, mentioned at p. 211, most unfortunately) to thrust aside the mask, and to reveal a depth of feeling which she as a rule studiously concealed. Mrs. Kennard is to be commended for the clearness, and for the womanly sympathy, with which she has dealt with these contradictory tendencies in a character which cannot be called perfect, and which, in some respects, can hardly be considered a very amiable one. She has made excellent use of her materials, and has produced incomparably the best biography of the Queen of Tragedy which exists in anything like moderate compass.

EASTERN GEOGRAPHY.*

Professor Keane places before us, in this little volume, what, as we hope with him, may be but the first of a series on Eastern Geography. Of such a series no portion was more needed, and, therefore, none better could have been chosen for a beginning, than a treatise dealing with the—comparatively speaking—unfamiliar characteristics of the heterogeneous territories and islands whose names figure on the title-page. The Professor rightly remarks that "these regions, notwithstanding their growing political and commercial importance, continue to be handled in such a perfunctory manner in popular works at home," and "that English students may be glad to welcome a work which can at least claim to be the first exclusively devoted to these remote lands."

The author has, in the arrangement of his book, wisely followed the same plan throughout. In the pages (Part I.) referring to the Malay Peninsula, in those (Part II.) which relate to Indo-China, and in the interesting and instructive account of the "Eastern Archipelago" which forms Part III., we have, first, a general survey, dealing with the chief physical features, then the particulars of the climate, the fauna, and the flora next; a disquisition on the races, the religion, and the language of the various inhabitants, finally, all needful details concerning the political divisions and the form of government. And these mere facts—the "dry bones," so to speak, of geography—the Professor has arranged and clothed so as to make them really pleasant, as well as useful, reading for the learner. He does himself no more than justice in saying that he has followed the true scientific method, whereby "relation between cause and effect takes the place of a bald statement of facts." Thus, to take his own instance, "the slow decay of the marvellous Cambodian culture becomes intimately associated with the slow subsidence of the waters, or the upheaval of the land, which converted a former marine inlet into a mere fishing-pond." Such passages, too, as those in which the author deals with the questions of the vanished Lemurian continent (pp. 110, 121), and of the sudden contrast between the forms of life (vegetable, animal, and even human) prevailing in the Asiatic, and in the Australian divisions of the Archipelago, divided as they are by "a narrow marine channel" (p. 115), are invaluable to the intelligent student. This is "teaching" in its best sense; and we can assure our readers that the Professor's performance fully equals his intentions. The references to authorities are in most cases given "chapter and verse;" but here and there this is not done. We would, too, suggest the insertion of a list of works consulted (among which, as regards the Eastern Archipelago, we should have expected to find the lately published work of Mr. Romilly, if not that of Baron Hubner). The plan, by means of which the table of contents is made to do duty also as an index, is in all respects to be commended.

THE ART JOURNAL.

The Art Journal for May is fully up to the normal standard of excellence. The large engraving of "Iona" is alone worth the cost of the entire number. We do not so much admire the French school of illustration as exemplified in a "foreign artist and author in England." There is admittedly a broad artistic effect, but there lacks the sharpness and refinement of the English system of reproducing pictures. The minor illustrations are numerous and effective.

OUR SOVEREIGN LADY: A BOOK FOR HER PEOPLE.*

Miss Marsh and her niece here present us with a pleasantly written account of Our Sovereign Lady, from childhood, through youth, wedded life, and bereavement, up to the present year of the Jubilee of Her reign. Full justice is done to Her many private virtues. It did not, of course, fall within the limited scope of a small book to point out the not less conspicuous self-control with which Her Majesty has performed, personal predilections or dislikes notwithstanding, Her duties as a constitutional Sovereign. Yet we should have wished to see some notice of the Empress-Queen's enlightened and womanly sympathy for Her Indian sister-subjects, as shown in the suggestion, originally hers, of the movement for providing female medical aid for Indian women.

In writing the last chapter the authoress has apparently forgotten the Biblical saying, that "to everything there is a season," and that the production of a Jubilee book is quite the wrong occasion on which to address people on the Last Judgment. It is recorded that a certain student, fresh from the perusal in Hebrew of the Book of Judges, was "instant in season and out of season" in asserting that Samson was the strongest man who ever had lived, or ever would live. "Not a bit of it," once said a comrade, when the subject had been brought up à propos de bottles, "you yourself are stronger than Samson; you have just lugged him in head and shoulders." Miss Marsh must blame herself if her singularly inopportune introduction of a very solemn topic should fail to increase the feeling of awed reverence with which it ought invariably to be approached, and should excite repugnance rather than veneration.

We have received from the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge a portrait of Her Majesty, printed in colours. The picture is both artistic and pleasing, and might with advantage find a niche in many a house where loyalty to the Queen is a tradition of the family.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"The Nation in Arms," translated from the German of Lieutenant-Colonel Baron von der Goltz, by Philip A. Ashworth (W. H. Allen and Co.); "Life of Monseigneur de Merope," by Monseigneur Besson, translated by Lady Herbert (W. H. Allen and Co.).

THE Pioneer newspaper publishes an interesting account of the travels of Mr. Carey, of the Bengal Civil Service, who started about two years ago on a journey of exploration to the north of the Himalayas. He arrived at Lake Lob in April, 1886, and, having got together a caravan to carry supplies, continued his journey. The same month he proceeded southward, and crossed the Altyn Tagh into Northern Tibet, a region described as most barren. For eighty-two days no human being was seen. He then met a caravan of Chinese pilgrims, who were unable to furnish supplies. At the end of July Mr. Carey left the caravan and went to seek food for his animals, and, having with difficulty obtained a stock of barley, rejoined the party in the Naichi Valley on Sept. 1. He then returned to Yarkand, where he wintered. He left Yarkand for India on March 7, crossed the Changla Pass, where deep snow was lying, and arrived safely at Leh. Mr. Carey has visited most places of importance in Eastern Turkistan and seen something of Mongolia, Tibet, and Western China. Everywhere he was well received by the officials and the people.

His Highness the Raja of Karpurthala has subscribed 1,000 rupees to the Aitchison Memorial.

THE Pioneer, writing of the situation in Afghanistan, says that the general feeling along the frontier, so far as it can learn, is that the Ghilzais cannot overturn the Ameer's Government, as they have no good arms and lack also leaders, to say nothing of money—the real sinews of war; but they seem to be desperate men playing a desperate game, and in all probability they will, for the credit of their once dominant tribe, try conclusions in the field with the Ameer's troops. The latter are now well armed and equipped, several regiments having breechloaders, and they will also have the advantage of artillery on their side. Even when Ayub Khan captured Kandahar, in 1881, the Ameer was equal not only to holding his own, but to beating his rival in a pitched battle, and he seems filled with far more confidence now, for he has consolidated his power during the last six years.

RUSSIA AND AFGHANISTAN.

THE farce of the Boundary Commission is likely to come to an end sooner than the diplomatists expected. The Times correspondent at St. Petersburg writes gravely that "there is reason to suppose that Colonel Kuhlberg, who represents the military part of the Russian half of the Commission, and who, of course, takes his instructions from the Minister of War and the Asiatic section of the Grand Staff, is disposed to be obstinately exacting and unyielding in laying down the Russian point of view," which view, it is further stated, "is more likely to prevail in regard to Khoja Saleh than it did in reference to Penjdeh and Dash Kepri."

It must be difficult to any one who has given any attention to the study of Russian history during the past half century to read this kind of information with patience. The European Powers have exacted treaties from Russia much more solemn and binding than any Afghanistan Boundary arrangements; and Russia, when it has suited her convenience, has deliberately torn up such treaties and laughed their provisions to scorn. England and France went to war with her in 1854 for an idea. After the expenditure of millions of money and thousands of valuable lives, terms of peace were come to, which terms were supposed to cripple Russia's powers of aggression for years to come. Yet within twenty years after the formal signing of the treaty which was to secure this great advantage Russia tore up the document and threw it in the face of the Powers who had made such sacrifices to coerce her. By the waters of the Alma, beside the caves of Inkerman, and on the heights of Sebastopol, there are French and English graves which bear witness to the intensity of a struggle which history has now shown to have been utterly futile and vain. Beaten back by force of arms for the moment, Russia has succeeded in winning her way by diplomacy in the end. Sebastopol is again a naval arsenal, and a Russian fleet commands the Black Sea. With this recent and very palpable experience of the value of Russian engagements in Europe before her, it is strange that England still holds to the belief that an engagement regarding certain boundary pillars on the frontier of Afghanistan will be respected by the Power who she is taught to believe intends to dispute the possession of her Indian Empire with her. The Afghan Boundary Commission was from its commencement a farce in politics, and a farce it still continues to be—only that the laughter is on the side of Russia. There the fun of the thing is thoroughly understood, but here we treat the matter with sober seriousness. We have hitherto been powerless to check the advance of Russia in Central Asia; she is still advancing, and we cherish the delusive idea that a line drawn on a map, and certain pillars erected on a frontier, will check her further progress. The idea is ridiculous. Whilst we are indulging in diplomatic ethics Russia is practically moving onwards. It suits her policy to play with us regarding Afghanistan Boundaries. Let the frontier line there be demarcated as clearly as it is possible to do—what then? Who is to guard its integrity? A clashing between the Russian and the Afghan outposts may be brought about in a moment by the judicious distribution of a few roubles, and what respect will then be paid to Boundary Commission deliberations, or to Boundary pillars? It may be asked, Would we then allow Russia to invade Afghanistan? We answer that it will be far better that she should do so than that we should repeat the folly which we have more than once perpetrated of doing so ourselves. A Russian invasion of Afghanistan, with the view of an attack upon British India, would be a movement which could be turned by England to the greatest advantage against her foe. Let Russia attempt the experiment, but let England wait and watch. Surely the history of the past should teach the lesson that another interference on our part in Afghanistan affairs with a view to check Russian progress would be worse than midsummer madness. Nearly twenty years ago, when John Lawrence was Viceroy and Governor-General of India, an official despatch from him in Council was written to the then Secretary of State for India, in which were these words:—"We object to any active interference in the affairs of Afghanistan or to the forcible or amicable occupation of any post or tract in that country beyond our own frontier. We think it impolitic and unwise to decrease any of the difficulties which would be entailed on Russia if that Power seriously thought of invading India, as we should certainly decrease them if we left our own frontier and met her half-way in a difficult country, and possibly in the midst of a hostile or exasperated population. Our true policy will be found to lie in abstinence from entanglements at either Cabul, Candahar, or any similar outpost; in full reliance on a compact, highly equipped, and disciplined army within our own territories or on our own border; in the contentment, if not in the attachment, of the masses, and in the sense of security of title and possession; in quiet preparation for all contingencies, and in a trust in the rectitude and honesty of our intentions, coupled with the avoidance of all sources of complaint which either invite foreign aggression or stir up restless spirits to domestic revolt."

These are words of wisdom which even from the tomb ought not to fall upon listless ears of our statesmen to-day.

BENGAL DETECTIVES.

Mr. R. Reed, author of some rather curious stories of detective work in Calcutta, is publishing a new book on the art of detection. In his preface he asserts that the Bengalis would, with proper tuition, make superior detectives for small case work. He gives instances to prove this:—

A little child about two and-a-half years of age was picked up in the street, and could give no account of itself. When brought to my office for disposal, it had in its little hand some parched gram which some kind-hearted moody had given it on the way. Though apparently frightened of the constable who picked it up in the street, and its strange surroundings, it clung to the staff of life, and every now and then would slip a grain of the gram into its mouth. Seeing this, I sent out for some sweets, which the child eagerly and even ravenously devoured; evidently it had been some time without food. The little one was then placed in charge of a constable, and while seated in the verandah began to arrange the parched gram, though in a rude and rough way, as a compositor sets up a column of type.

When the grains of gram were all exhausted, the child would commence at the top of the column, and imitate the breaking up and distribution of type on the floor. The constable, seeing this, came into my office and drew my attention to the fact, remarking as he did, "Sahib, there is a printing-office on my beat, and I have watched the compositors through the window perform the same action as the child is doing in breaking and setting up the type. Its parents are therefore most probably compositors," and, such in fact, was found to be the case.

I suggested that the constable should be attached to the Detective Department. He was a young man, and had only been a few months in the police. But my recommendation was pooh-poohed, and the proverbial school-boy quoted, to show, I suppose, that any simpleton would have made the same remark as the constable. But I maintain that there is not one man in ten thousand who would have been able to read in the rude arrangement of a handful of parched gram a clue to the child's parents. This is how the detective instinct in individual police officers is nipped in the bud, and the Press and the public cry out that insufficiency is due to the absence of detective ability amongst the Natives of India. How are superior police officers to encourage and develop detective ability in their subordinate when they are themselves ignorant of its very principles? The root of the evil lies here.

Ingenuity, quick perception, and low cunning are qualities for which the Natives of Bengal especially are noted—the stuff which makes an admirable tool in the hands of a master of the detective profession, though they may be incapable of the more important undertakings where mind struggles with mind,—I mean where analytical ability is required in disentangling mystery.

It is not, however, in matters beyond the limits of mere rule that the skill of the detective is evinced. He makes in silence a host of observations and inferences; so perhaps do his opponents, and the difference in the extent of the information thus obtained lies not so much in the validity of the inferences as the quality of the observations.

TRIAL BY ORDEAL.

A dispute once arose between two Garos concerning a narrow strip of land that lay between their cultivations. Each man claimed it, and declared his intention of clearing and cultivating it. The quarrel grew more and more bitter, friends on each side were drawn into it, and a considerable amount of ill-will arose. At last one of the disputants carried the case into court. The dispute was one that should have been settled by the Village Panchayat, and it was therefore referred to that primitive tribunal. Village Panchayats were very simple affairs in those days. No evidence was called for, and no witnesses were required in this case. With the wisdom of serpents the village elders removed the responsibility of deciding between the two men from their own shoulders, by suggesting that the case should be settled by trial by ordeal. The two men, Bagrin and Rembo, were quite satisfied with this arrangement. On the appointed day they appeared before the Panchayat to go through the performance. The grave faces of the crowd who had assembled to see the trial showed that they considered the business a very serious one. Umpires were chosen, and the materials for the ordeal were brought and placed on the ground before them. These materials consisted of a small heap of stones, all as nearly as possible of one size; some small bundles of wood, also of one size; two earthen vessels, some cold water, and a smouldering wood fire. Bagrin and Rembo selected a certain number of stones and arranged them carefully on the ground in such a position as to form a rest for the earthen vessels. The sticks were then divided between them, and the water measured and poured into the vessels. The men were allowed to arrange the sticks, &c., to their liking. The preliminaries were settled without any disputing, and it was evident that the men trusted implicitly to the honesty of the umpires who divided the materials. When all was ready, at a given signal Bagrin and Rembo each snatched a brand for the smouldering fire and proceeded to light the sticks they had arranged under the earthen vessels. Whoever succeeded in making the water boil first would be the rightful owner of the disputed piece of ground.

The interest taken in the proceedings by the lookers-on was intense. No one attempted to break the ring and push themselves forward, but every neck was craned towards the two earthen pots, and all eyes were anxiously fixed on the water they contained. Every now and again some one in the crowd called out a word of advice as to the better adjustment of the sticks. The water soon began to steam. The umpires stood gravely gazing into the water; the pots might begin boiling so nearly together as to make it doubtful which was the first, and it behoves the umpires to be keenly watchful.

It soon became apparent that Bagrin's fire was doing its work more satisfactorily than Rembo's. Both the men arranged and rearranged their sticks carefully so as to get the greatest amount of heat immediately under the pot; but Rembo's fire would not burn steadily. The flames shot out on all sides, instead of rising in one direction. Perhaps he was less skilled in the art of fire-making than his opponent; or, perhaps, a kindly current of air fanned Bagrin's fire and not his. Whatever might be the cause, the water in Rembo's pot was quite still and unruffled, when the other's pot was bubbling away briskly. There was no outburst of disappointment or pleasure when the result was known. Rembo accepted his failure without complaint or discontent, and everyone appeared to be perfectly satisfied. The ordeal could not they thought, be wrong; and the result was much more satisfactory than if the case had been settled in any other way. The advantage of this simple trial by ordeal was obvious: it left no ill-feeling between the parties who agreed to abide by it. They could be friendly again, and everyone returned to their village, thoroughly satisfied with the results of the ceremony.—"Esmé" in the Pioneer.

UNVEILING THE EDEN STATUE.

On Saturday afternoon (April 16), Sir Steuart Bayley performed the ceremony of unveiling the statue of Sir Ashley Eden at Calcutta. The statue is executed in white marble by Boehm, the London artist, and is said to be a very striking likeness of the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. The following report of the ceremony appears in a Calcutta paper:—

"The Hon. Mr. Justice H. T. Prinsep, in opening the proceedings, said that five years ago, at the termination of Sir Ashley Eden's tenure of office as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, a public meeting was held at the Town Hall, at which all classes of the community in Calcutta and throughout Bengal were numerously represented, and it was then unanimously determined, in appreciation of his eminent services, to erect in this city some memorial of the high estimation in which his administration was held. To carry out this a committee was appointed, many members of which were no longer present amongst them; and of them he would only mention the Chairman, Sir Richard Garth, in whose absence he had been invited to preside on this memorable occasion. A marble statue of Sir Ashley Eden had been constructed by Mr. Boehm, an eminent sculptor of London, which was now before them. It was not for him at present to ask their criticism of that work, but he had no doubt that when it was exposed to their view they would not fail to recognise its excellence both as an accurate resemblance of its illustrious original, and as a work of art. It seemed almost unnecessary for him to remind them of the successful character of Sir Ashley Eden's administration as Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal. The keenness of his perception; his incisive analysis of every scheme suggested to him; the vigour and resolution with which he carried through what he had become convinced was for the benefit of the country; the fertility of his resource to overcome obstruction; his long and varied experience; and, above all, the thorough honesty of purpose and the confidence he inspired among all, official and non-official, with whom he was placed in contact combined to secure that brilliant and successful administration which only ensure for his reputation a monument more durable than it was in their power to erect. On more than one occasion, and with some risk to his own public career, he had courageously stood forth as the redresser of wrongs, the champion of the oppressed, and had been the means of securing liberty and freedom of action to the poorest classes of the community—(applause).

"His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor then addressed the assembly in a somewhat lengthy speech, in which was reviewed the principal features of Sir Ashley Eden's administration, apart from the strength of his character and the sound common sense, which were obvious to all. His Honour had always been struck by the extraordinary quickness and activity of Sir Ashley's mind. He had an intuitive faculty which Lord Ripon in one of his speeches had also noticed, of getting at salient facts. He would grasp all the leading points of a complicated bundle of papers, while another man would be still fumbling over the top letter. He managed to be acquainted with all that was going on around him, and he had a genius for supplying the missing links in a chain of circumstances, which he applied to the facts of everyday life. But nothing served him better than the genuine and sympathetic friendship which he had acquired by constant intercourse with the Native friends who had gathered round him in the early part of his career and clung to him to its close. He was always ready to serve his Native friends, and talked to them with the utmost fondness. He was never stiff or formal, nor did he shrink if necessary from saying unpleasant things. But he treated them as friends because he felt toward them as a friend, and this was one of the many elements of his success. Of course there were faults as his policy failed or stumbled. This, however, was not the time or place to speak of these, and he left the ungracious task to others. "His Honour's speech was greeted with frequent bursts of applause, and at its conclusion Sir Stuart Bayley unveiled the statue, and the ceremony was completed."

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CAPTAIN A. C. BAILWARD, R.A., proceeds home to join C-4 Royal Artillery, into which he has been permitted to exchange.

LIEUTENANT H. M. BROWNLOW, Royal Lancashire Regiment, has been appointed to the 14th Sikhs as a probationer for the Staff Corps.

THE 5-1st Southern Division, Royal Artillery, from Mandalay, is expected at Calcutta on the 24th instant, en route for Rawal Pindi.

LIEUTENANT G. W. MARTIN, Oudh Volunteer Rifles, is the best Battalion shot for the year with 228 points, and wins the silver medal.

THE Burma Field Force raised in Oudh, amounting to six companies, embarked at Calcutta in the Canning on the 25th instant.

CAPTAIN E. A. TRAVERS, 1st Battalion 2nd Goorkhas, is appointed to officiate as Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General, Presidency District, vice Captain V. Schalch, proceeding on leave.

ON return from duty in England Major D. Hildebrand, R.E., Superintending Engineer, Military Works Department, is posted to Biluchistan.

CAPTAIN SIR R. A. W. COLLETON, Bart., Deputy Assistant Adjutant-General for Musketry, has proceeded to Pachmarhi as Instructor in the School of Musketry formed there.

MAJOR J. KEITH, Royal Artillery, having been relieved from the appointment of Assistant Adjutant-General, Royal Artillery, has been posted to Jutogh for duty.

LIEUT. W. A. OSWALD, 15th Madras Infantry, has been appointed Post Transport Officer at Kyousai, without prejudice to his other duties, vice Lieut. G. A. Ward, relieved.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT has subscribed Rs. 100 towards the Indian Rifle Association and the project for sending a team of Indian Volunteers to Wimbledon this year.

It is deemed probable in military circles that Brigadier-General Wolsey will be appointed to the Mandalay command on Brigadier-General East's return to Jubbulpore.

MAJOR H. A. SAWYER, 14th Sikhs, succeeds to the appointment of Assistant Quartermaster-General, Intelligence Branch, vice Lieutenant-Colonel J. P. Maitland, whose tenure of office expires on the 26th inst.

THE following appointments have been made:—31st Punjab Infantry:—Colonel F. Tweddell to be Commandant; Major E. W. Smyth to be Second in Command; and Major A. C. G. Lydiard to be Wing Commander.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL W. KNOX LEET, V.C., 2nd Battalion Somersetshire Light Infantry, will be placed on the Retired List on the 1st May, 1887, on completing four years' service in command of the battalion, and is permitted to proceed home on and after that date.

THE 1st Battalion 3rd Goorkhas arrived at Calcutta on the 19th instant from field service in Burma, and proceeded to Almora, their old station, on the 20th, Colonel E. Stedman in command. The formation of the second battalion will now be proceeded with.

THE 2-5th Goorkhas have succeeded in earning distinction. Brigadier-General McQueen, C.B., who has inspected them, speaks very highly of the battalion, which now numbers over 600 strong, and if it had obtained 300 men, as was originally intended, from Assam regiments, it would have been pretty well up to strength.

THE following Royal Engineer officers have been transferred from the Bombay to the Bengal Presidency, and have been posted as follows:—Lieutenant H. V. Biggs to the Presidency and Oudh Commands as an attached officer to the Military Works Department; and Lieutenants C. S. Rose and E. D. Bullen to the Bengal Sappers and Miners.

DR. W. H. HARDING, Officiating Civil Surgeon, North-West Provinces, has been transferred from Futtehpur to Banda. Lieutenant-Colonel H. Rivett-Carnac, C.I.E., Commandant, Ghazipur Volunteer Rifle Corps, has been granted six months' leave of absence, with effect from 15th April, 1887. Major G. J. Nicholls officiates as Commandant, Ghazipur Volunteer Rifle Corps, during the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel Rivett-Carnac.

THE 14th Madras Infantry have proceeded to Htgaing and Katha for location there; the 12th Bengal Infantry has been moved from Katha to Bharno, leaving a detachment en route at Shweguggyi; and after relief by the 12th Khelat-i-Ghilzais, the 2nd Infantry, Hyderabad Contingent, will embark on board the Pulu for Mandalay, where the regiment is expected to arrive on or about the 27th instant.

THE 2nd Battalion of the 2nd Goorkhas has received a well-merited compliment from H.E. the Viceroy. After a very rigid inspection his Excellency expressed his extreme satisfaction at the steadiness of the troops, especially that of the "2nd Battalion, which had been raised barely over a year, and which marched past in a manner that would have done credit to one of the oldest regiments in the service." The remark speaks well, not only for the officers who have had command of the regiment, but also for the smartness and steadiness of the men.

ON the recommendation of the Principal Medical Officer, Burma Field Force, the following medical arrangements have been ordered:—Surgeon E. H. L. Bell, M.S., with D Section, No. 4 Field Hospital, to proceed from Mandalay to Shwebo, and relieve Surgeon-Major Venour, who will proceed with A and B Sections of 16 Field Hospital from Shwebo to Mandalay, and report himself to the Principal Medical Officer. Sections C and D, No. 16 British Field Hospital complete, will move from Katha to Mandalay, the hospital being closed on the reduction of British Field Hospitals ordered by the General commanding the Burma Field Force. Surgeon-Major A. Minto, with a Section of No. 4 Field Hospital complete, to proceed from Mandalay to Bharno, in relief of Section G, No. 17 British Field Hospital, which will proceed with Surgeon Myles, M.S., in charge to Male, on the Irrawaddy, there to be stationed. Surgeon P. F. O'Connors, I.M.S., with C and D Sections, 18th Native Field Hospital complete, will proceed from Katha to Bharno, to relieve Surgeon Coney, who will then proceed with Section No. 19 Native Field Hospital to Htgaing, there to be stationed. Surgeon F. Ilderton, M.S., will return to India in medical charge of the 5-1st Southern Division, Royal Artillery.

TAXATION IN CHANDERNAGORE.—The Englishman writes:—"While we have been luxuriating in quiet and peace, all unknown to us, or, at least, unheeded by us, a neighbouring Power has been shaken to its centre! Chandernagore has gone through all the throes of a budding revolution, and has emerged from the strife victorious indeed, but unnerved, and with an uneasy feeling that at any moment war may break out again. It appears that the merchants and shopkeepers went on strike on the 23rd of March, and refused to pay certain taxes recently imposed on them. Matters were most serious, and the Government was in despair, but the strike did not last long. By noon of the same day a large number of the revolutionists reopened their establishments, and by the next day the most obstinate of the malcontents submitted, and even went so far as to indite a touching appeal addressed to the clemency of the authorities. Fortunately for these, there are no professional agitators as at home to fan the flames among the Natives. Talking apart, however, there clearly is much to be said on behalf of the people, who are heavily burdened by taxes which from an outside view are unreasonable and curiously unfair, some localities being affected, while others are untouched. Formerly a merchant in the bazaar paid eight annas yearly for the privilege of exhibiting his wares. This has been increased to the enormous sum of four annas a day, which is decidedly a sudden rise. In two days to pay what hitherto sufficed for a year must seem to the victim a very hard case. Some trades suffer more than others; the tobacconist and the seller of betel pay one anna a day. Fairly enough greengrocers are exempt, but why should jewellers be so also? Theirs can scarcely be called a sale of necessities. But the real grievance is this. All these taxes are imposed, not for the benefit of Chandernagore, but for that of Pondicherry. The Budget has not been favourable this year, nevertheless Pondicherry wants to rebuild its prison, and seeks to improve its trade by abolishing certain port dues. The Council then seem to have hit on the delightfully easy expedient of making Chandernagore pay up the deficit—600,000 francs are needed. By all means let Chandernagore disburse the amount, a tax here, a tax there, and the thing is done. Strange to relate, Chandernagore takes another view, and declines to be bled, even for the benefit of Pondicherry. For the past two years certain taxes, in the latter place, have been two-and-a-half per cent. less than in the former, so finally, and naturally enough, the little dependency has cried out against the injustice, and asserted itself in a manner that the authorities must listen to."

THE BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

FOOD PRODUCTS.

EXTRACTS.

THE COMPANY'S EXTRACTS are manufactured on a new principle, which yields products of the very best quality.

"Normal" Food Extract is superior to most, if not all, other Meat Extracts, owing to its richness in stimulating and restorative properties. It contains, as shown by analysis, less ash and water, and more substances soluble in alcohol, and more nitrogenous compounds than the best known Extracts.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE CALCUTTA REVIEW.

(The only Quarterly Review in India.)

ESTABLISHED 1844.

OPINIONS.

The Calcutta Review for October reached us a day or two ago, and a glance at its contents shows that the number more than sustains the reputation which this old and favourite publication is again achieving. The Review is rapidly regaining the position which it... there is no fear of the Indian Review, or the Asiatic Quarterly rivalling it in public favour.—Statesman, October 1886.

... The best service which I ever rendered in India, or, indeed, for India, was the establishment, single-handed, of the Calcutta Review, which has done far more for Indian literature than anything I have written under my own name.—J. W. KAYE, Athenaeum Club, June 23, 1872.

The Calcutta Review has given us valuable articles on the army. Some from the pen of Sir Henry Lawrence, who wrote with the spirit of prophecy, of the coming storm of which he was one of the noblest victims.—Address of the C-in-C. at the U.S. Inst. of India.

... The Calcutta Review has not only throughout its career reflected the highest honour on its public-spirited promoters and its well-known distinguished contributors, but has done much to help forward the reconstruction of our system of governing India.—Westminster Review.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, MAY 23, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 6th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 4th May; and from Calcutta to the 3rd May.

THE mails from London of April 15 arrived at Bombay May 2.

THE only recent news received regarding the Ghilzai rebellion is that the heads of several of the slain Hotaks have arrived at Kandahar.

DETAILS of the defeat of the Ghilzais a week or two ago near Mukur have come to hand. From Cabul, Ghulam Hyder Orakzai has sent a dispatch to the Ameer giving the desired confirmation of the current report. The engagement, it appears, lasted from daybreak till ten o'clock in the morning, when the Hotaks were driven up the Mukir hill, on the slopes of which they had apparently made a stand.

COLONEL ATAULLAH KHAN, our Envoy in Afghanistan, who has been halting at Peshawur on private affairs, starts immediately for Cabul. Travellers from Kandahar report that the Governor of that city is receiving practical proof of the defeat of the Hotak Ghilzais near Maruf in the shape of the heads of some score of Ghilzai dead.

ACCORDING to present arrangements the military police in Upper Burma will be raised to 17,000 Natives of India and 6,000 Burmese, who will gradually replace the military.

It is hoped that, eventually, a police force of 20,000, composed equally of Indians and Burmese, will suffice both for the Upper and the Lower Province.

THE news that the dreaded disease, known as Kumri, has made terrible ravages among the Cavalry horses in Upper Burma, and this in the dry weather, too, has caused considerable consternation.

THE Sub-Committee of the Public Service Commission have proceeded to Simla to examine the heads of Departments there, and to compile the evidence they have hitherto been hearing. They then proceed to Bombay and Madras.

SIR A. CROFT, Director of Public Instruction in Bengal, has been placed on special duty at Simla to compile a general review of the existing state of education in India.

THE Finance Committee is reported to have recommended very substantial reductions in the Simla allowances. Before leaving Calcutta for that place the Committee informed the several Government Secretariats that while their allowances would not be interfered with during the present season final orders would be passed before the officers returned to Calcutta in November next.

COLONEL BANNERMAN, Political Agent at Gwalior, acts for Sir Lepel Griffin as Governor-General's Agent in Central India.

A CYCLONE has swept over Rangoon, doing immense damage to property on land and sea.

A GIRDER of the Kistnah Bridge, on the Koregaon-Miraj section, has been blown down, killing six coolies.

The Poona police have discovered the existence of a gang of burglars among the Dublin Fusiliers, several of whom have been arrested.

AMIRAL RICHARDS intends being at Colombo with the Bacchante and other war-vessels on the East-India Station on the occasion of Her Majesty's Jubilee, when a naval review on a small scale will in all probability take place.

THE HON. THE MAHARAJAH OF DURGHA will present a handsome casket to the Queen, containing a letter of congratulation on Her Majesty having attained the Jubilee year of her reign. The Maharaja has also subscribed Rs. 50,000 towards the Imperial Institute and £5,000 towards the testimonial to the Prince of Wales.

THE MAHARAJAH of BHUTPUR sends a deputation to England to represent his State at the Jubilee celebration.

THE Freemasons of the Punjab are preparing an illuminated "address of loyalty" for presentation to the Queen. It will be forwarded in time for the celebration of the Jubilee at home.

MR. PAYNE, the gentleman who has undertaken the management and supervision of the Amir's workshops, arrived safely at Kabul some time ago. He has taken up with him some Chinese workmen.

THE latest estimate of the profits likely to be realised by the Ceylon Government from the Pearl Fishery is Rs. 4,00,000, which will most probably be sufficient to prevent the anticipated deficit in the revenue.

MR. A. D. CAREY, of whose adventurous travels in Northern Tibet and Chinese Turkistan some notice was taken a few weeks back has again been heard of. His safe arrival at Leh from Yarkand is reported.

MR. JAMES WALKER, President of the Simla Municipality has sent in his resignation of that appointment owing to his departure for England on furlough. Mr. Walker, who is also the Commandant of the 2nd Punjab (or Simla) Volunteer Rifles, will, during his absence, be succeeded by a military officer. Mr. E. V. S. Cullin succeeds Mr. Walker as President of the Municipality.

THE Bombay Municipal Corporation are delegating Captain Morland, the Chairman of the Commissioners, to proceed to England to present the Jubilee Address to the Queen. Some members opposed the step, on the ground that the Address was virtually placed at the foot of the Throne when presented to Lord Reay on the occasion of the Jubilee Celebration in India.

MADRAS clings to the plan of a second Jubilee Celebration on the 20th of June. The original Jubilee Committee, or what is now left of it, has decided to open the new Town Hall on that day, and to "keep it up" with various festivities.

THE Austro-Hungarian Consul at Bombay has been raised to the rank of Consul-General, with powers extending over all the Austro-Hungarian Consulates in British India, Aden, Ceylon, and Burma.

PUBLIC meetings and entertainments have been held in various parts of the Presidency in honour of Sir William Wedderburn, who is retiring from the Bombay Civil Service.

AN influentially signed memorial has been presented to the Governor of Bombay, protesting against the appointment of a civilian to act for the Chief Presidency Magistrate during his absence on leave.

COLONEL BOWEN, Secretary to the Mysore Government, Public Works Department, is to have his service in the Mysore State extended four years.

MAJOR KENSINGTON, who has returned to India, will be Colonel Bowen's Assistant.

THE Chamber of Commerce and the Port Trust of Karachi have decided to represent to Government the desirability of constructing two lines of railway, one from the town of Bhawalpore, on the Indus Valley Railway, along the left bank of the Sutlej, to a point on the Rewari-Ferozepore line, and the [other from Hyderabad, through Omerkote and Southern Rajpootana, to the town of Pachpadra, in the Jodhpur State. The latter line will bring the trade of Delhi and Agra by more than 100 miles shorter route to the sea, and the general opinion is that it will pay handsomely.

It is understood that Sir W. W. Hunter has retired from the Indian Service, so far as service in India is concerned. But there is a rumour, which may be confirmed, that he will represent India at the Conference now sitting in London about Imperial Federation.

COLONEL PEMBERTON has been appointed Secretary to the Government of India in the Public Works Department, in the place of the late General Hancock, and Colonel L. Conway-Gordon succeeds Colonel Pemberton as Director-General of State Railways.

COLONEL STEDMAN, the newly-appointed Inspector-General of Military Police in Burma, has proceeded to Simla to receive instructions before starting to take up his appointment. Captain Graves, of the 26th P.I., District Superintendent of Police at Port Blair, has been appointed Second-in-Command under Colonel Stedman.

MR. C. H. HILL, barrister-at-law and Public Prosecutor, Allahabad, acts as a Judge of the High Court when Mr. Justice Straight goes on leave this month.

AN important Government resolution has been published, giving particulars of the agreement between the Government and Messrs. Thomas Cook and Son, for the conveyance of pilgrims to Mecca. Under the new arrangement tickets will be issued to pilgrims at all the principal Mahomedan centres, and on arrival in Bombay they will be taken charge of by the tourist firm; they will be protected from being plundered by touts, and the control of Government will be strengthened.

As there are no measures of importance pending, the Viceregal Legislative Council is not likely to begin its labours during the current Simla season until about the end of May.

Notes of the Week.

THE latest news from India is neither sensational nor alarming. The Times Correspondent contents himself with the brief telegram which we reproduce, but which invites little comment. Until the full and final report of the Public Service Commission is published it seems of little interest or moment to telegraph the views of individual witnesses. There is not likely to be unanimity of opinion amongst men of different interests and idiosyncracies, and when the report is published it may be doubted whether it will have the influence anticipated for it in some quarters of bringing about a satisfactory settlement of the vexed questions which the Commission was formed for the purpose of inquiring into.

It would appear that the Simla exodus ghost has not yet been laid. One Anglo-Indian journal pretends to give a sort of precis of a despatch from the Government of India to the Secretary of State, in which the former state that "they are not specially attached to Simla or any hill station." Being, like Mr. Toots, of this indifferent nature they "however consider that if the Supreme Government are to be located in the plains during the hot season, Calcutta is not a suitable location. In such an event they think that a new situation such as Poona should be selected."

It need not be said that the enlightened opinion of Calcutta is opposed to this suggestion, and that the enlightened opinion of Bombay highly approves of it. But, according to this despatch, it is suggested that the permanent location of the Supreme Government in the plains might deter statesmen of the first rank from accepting the post of Viceroy. This is a very ancient objection, and it is strange that no newer argument has been discovered in the despatch by the journalist in possession of its contents. But even this has caused the Times Correspondent to wire home that the information is considered unreliable and untrustworthy. The Indian papers to hand by the mail which did not get the first insight into the despatch say the same!

IN the meantime, however, we are told that inquiries are being made of the Native chiefs, through whose territory the proposed Simla railway will run, to ascertain what would be the probable outlay required for the land needed for the line, and the Government are said to be willing to hand over the undertaking to a private company. This may be unreliable and untrustworthy too, but, as a fact, the Viceroy and the Departmental heads, with their staff, are at Simla, and that the erection and completion of public offices there still continues. Would it not save much trouble and indignation-writing if it were announced "on authority" that the fixed locality for the Viceroy and his Council during the hot season was to be Simla? The evil passions of Calcutta might in time be calmed down, and the aspirations of Bombay and Poona modified.

MAZAR ALI, the murderer of Major Neill, was executed on April 29 at Agar, in presence of the whole regiment, the sentence of death having been confirmed by Sir Lepel Griffin, the plea of insanity set up having been rejected after careful inquiry and consideration. However painful the duty of confirming a sentence of death may be to a revising official, Sir Lepel Griffin did wisely in acting with boldness and decision. Mazar Ali said that "he was inspired by Heaven to kill the sahib." It may be in the recollection of some Anglo-Indians that this was exactly the plea raised by the murderer of Mr. Justice Norman at Calcutta, but it did not avail with Sir George Campbell, who was then Lieut.-Governor of Bengal.

LORD BYRON wrote of his wife, who, having doubts of his sanity, sent a couple of doctors to examine him, that "she first considered he was mad, then came to the conclusion he was only bad." The Pioneer has come to the conclusion that the Maharaja Dhuleep Singh is mad. Private information from England has, it states, confirmed this view. But it allows that there is considerable method in his madness, and adds that his conduct lately, his sudden abjuration of religion, loyalty, and friends, show that there is a weak side to the Oriental character whose development is not always due to ill-treatment, and that his vagaries may, in a sense, be useful and instructive as a guide to the Government in dealing with conquered princes hereafter.

BUT it is not likely that history—such history as he was concerned in—will repeat itself. We have more than once in these columns touched upon this matter, and our Allahabad contemporary, whilst referring to the alarmists who would make capital out of Dhuleep Singh's disaffection, almost reiterates our own words:—"The object (of the agitators) is to excite uneasiness in India itself, and particularly among the Sikhs in the Punjab, but Russian diplomatists should by this time have learned that the apostasy of Dhuleep Singh made his name a worthless one to conjure with years ago, and his modified recantation of Christianity has had no effect upon his countrymen. He may in a half-demented way parade himself through Russia as a rebel against England, but this certainly will not win over one adherent to his cause among the Sikhs. Their contempt which his past life excited in their minds may be softened by pity for his present folly, the outcome of his mental derangement, but that will be the limit of their interest in himself and his actions."

It is satisfactory to find English officials on their retirement from the scene of their labours in India leaving that country carrying away with them the affection and esteem of the Natives. One of the vernacular papers thus notices the departure of Sir W. W. Hunter:—

Dr. Hunter is shortly to sever his connection, as a public servant, with this country. The whole of India will be very sorry to hear of the retirement of one who has laid it under very deep obligations. He supported, heart and soul, the policy of Lord Ripon and his labours in connection with the Imperial Gazetteer and the Education Commission were very commendable. We shall sadly feel Dr. Hunter's loss. Poor Hindustan! Such a man can only get into the India Council if her stars are in the ascendant.

SIR W. WEDDERBURN'S virtues are chronicled in a more poetic form. A special Hindustani song was sung at a meeting in Bombay, convened to bid farewell, and the following is a translation of the poet's graceful verse:—

Of noble mind and great is Wedderburn!
Unfortunate this land in losing him,
Than whom no warmer friend she yet hath seen
Or e'er shall see. In temper mild, but just,
Kind to the poor—his virtuous deeds
With wonder fill us.

Exalted sir,
In your great country's councils may you still Keep up your life's good work; and find your meed
In the approving eye of our good Queen!
Such is the fervent prayer your humble friends
Offer with grateful hearts at Heaven's throne.

THE House of Lords sat for a short time on Saturday when the Duke of Connaught's Leave Bill and the East India Stock Conversion Bill were passed through all their stages.

ANGLO-INDIANS will be glad to learn that a second series of "Distinguished Anglo-Indians" is in preparation, including, with a sketch of Sir Joseph Fayrer, K.C.S.I., F.R.S., extracts from the Surgeon-General's Diaries while on his travels with the Royal Princes in India. As the author would like to have some brief sketches or notices of various Anglo-Indians who received orders or other marks of distinction, he would feel obliged by any notes being sent him, to the care of the publishers, Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 22.

The most important witness examined by the Committee of the Public Service Commission at Simla last week was Mr. Westland, acting Financial Secretary to the Government. He gave it as his opinion that the higher appointments in the Financial Department should, as a rule, be reserved for covenanted civilians, other persons being admitted only for exceptional merit. He thought this necessary to keep up the status and efficiency of the department. It was also advisable to pass some civilians through the department for training. He considered the present system of recruiting as bad as it could be. Better men could be got from England than in India. There were some of the higher appointments which Natives might hold, but not many, as they would not take responsibility upon themselves. He knew three Natives in the superior grades, one of whom was absolutely useless, while another was as good as a European.

Last Monday the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal unveiled a portrait of Sir Rivers Thompson in the Calcutta Town-hall, in presence of a large assembly. Mr. Turner, President of the Chamber of Commerce, in opening the proceedings, described Sir R. Thompson as a true Englishman who for long years had steadfastly responded to the calls of duty, and without fear or favour had persistently done what he believed to be right. Sir S. Bayley then spoke. He said his acquaintance with and admiration of Sir R. Thompson had commenced when they were boys together at Eton. In subsequent years he had lost none of his admiration for Sir R. Thompson's untiring pluck, patience, unswerving loyalty, high sense of duty, and conscientious performance of what he thought right. The Maharajah Norendro Krishna, on behalf of the Native community, also rendered a warm tribute of praise to the late Lieutenant-Governor. The portrait is by Mr. Archer, R.S.A.

It is understood that the summary of the Indian Government's despatch on the Simla question lately published in some local newspapers was very inaccurate and untrustworthy.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 22.

Mr. Hildebrand, Superintendent of the Shan States, telegraphs that a letter has been received from Mr. Scott, his assistant, who is at Mone, announcing that the Limbin Prince and his personal followers have surrendered, and that some important Shan chiefs of Mone and Maukine have also submitted. Mr. Scott will proceed to Fort Stedman, accompanied by the Limbin Prince.

DEFENCE OF INDIA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—in the Century Magazine for this month (p. 131) you will find an excellent illustration of the danger of neglecting a few miles of strategical railway. While the Indian Government has been directly (or indirectly through English speculators) expending millions upon millions on what are called profitable railways, it has refused to make a railway from Jubulpore to Nagpoor, on which not only all the other railways, but the existence of the Empire itself, may depend.

I have founded my arguments on the opinion of our best General, Viscount Wolseley. If the British nation should wish for further evidence, let it send a mission across the Atlantic to General Rosecranz, who, after an interval of twenty-four years, has narrated his difficulties in the campaign for Chattanooga. The General is said to have had a copy of Shakespeare's Hamlet under his pillow during the difficult manœuvres which he devised.

How comparatively easy the General's march on Chattanooga would have been if there had been a rail from Louisville to Knoxville! The break of a few miles between London in Kentucky and Barboursville must have cost the lives of thousands of soldiers and of millions of money.

So with the break between Jubulpore and Nagpoor; the whole of the Nerbudda Valley, rich in cotton and wheat, may be swept by an enemy because we have no means of rapidly conveying our soldiers from Kamptee northwards.

A few months ago an experiment was made to send a small body of cavalry in light marching order from Kamptee to Jubulpore. It was hoped that the march would be a very rapid one, but but compare it with transit by railway.

Your obedient servant,

SIR ROPER LETHBRIDGE.—At a meeting of the North Kensington Conservative Association held on the 16th inst., Sir Roper Lethbridge, M.P., referring to certain rumours in respect of the alleged resignation of his seat for North Kensington, said that it was perfectly true he was compelled a short time ago to go to India in search of health, and he was happy to say he had found it. But while in India he had not forgotten what were his duties as an English member of Parliament, and had lost no opportunity of endeavouring to find out what could be done for improving and developing the trade of this country. While in India he looked most closely into this great subject, and now come to the conclusion that there could be no means more effectual for the improvement of the position of England as a commercial country than to open up to home trade with India and the loyal Colonies of the Queen. Upon the invitation of the Prince of Wales he had accepted the honorary secretaryship of the Imperial Institute, and that was the circumstance which had been twisted by their friends the enemy into his acceptance of an Indian appointment which would involve the resignation of his seat. There was no truth whatever in such a rumour, and if it were true, he might assure his constituents that they would not hear of it for the first time through the columns of a newspaper. Sir Roper Lethbridge then delivered an address upon the political situation.

INDIAN RIVER SCENES.—"A Christian," writing to a Calcutta paper under date the 8th, says:—"Yesterday I happened to be an unfortunate observer of what I considered to be a most unnatural treatment of a corpse in the port of Chandbali. I was on board one of the steamers which regularly ply to this place. At about noon I observed an old woman, aged between forty-five and fifty years, labouring hard to drag a corpse by the legs, a distance of about thirty or forty yards across the Strand Road, to commit it to the river. On inquiring from by-standers I ascertained that the woman was the mother of the dead; and as she could get no help whatever to remove the body she was obliged to subject it to this unnatural treatment. The matter, I believe, was reported to the police, but no steps were taken to remove the body, and as the tide receded at 6 P.M. the body was left high and dry, a most horrible sight for one with human feelings."

THE steamer Caldera and the British India steamer Goorkha have been in collision in the Red Sea. The former vessel sank. The latter vessel has put into Suakim badly damaged below the water-line and cannot proceed. The crew of the Caldera was landed at Suakim. The Caldera was an iron screw steamer of 2,117 gross tons, built at Dumbarton in 1868, owned by Messrs. F. Stumore and Co., London, and was homeward bound from Pondicherry to Marseilles. The Goorkha is outward bound from London for Calcutta.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

AFFAIRS IN BHAMO.

(Pioneer.)

In no part of Upper Burma is the success we have obtained more marked than in Bhamo. The whole of the arrangements there reflect the greatest credit on Mr. Burgess and Major Adamson, the Civil Officers. After the attack on the stockade and the murder of a British non-commissioned officer in the Chinese quarter last December strong measures were taken. The quarter was searched for arms, and one Chinese headman was fined Rs. 3,000 for having guns and ammunition hidden in his house. The Chinese on this closed their shops; two days afterwards a pork-vendor complained that his stock had been seized by the orders of the Chinese. The ringleader this time was brought up for theft and punished as a common thief, and the Bhamo Chinese difficulty was over. The next day the Chinese reopened their shops and have been doing a flourishing trade since. The Shans in the town are daily increasing in numbers, some 200 families having had quarters allotted to them in the past few months. The trade with China is rapidly increasing, and the Ka-chins who were formerly hostile to the Burmese are friendly to us and largely employed on public works. Danger is always to be feared by the assembling of outlaws and blackguards from both China and Burma in the Ka-Chin hills, where they are at all times on the look-out for opportunities to burn and plunder. But as the Ka-Chins get more civilised and friendly to us this danger will be minimised, and they will cease to be the victims of any plausible scoundrel pretending to be working for either the Chinese Government or some Burman prince. The appointment to Bhamo of Mr. Baber and Mr. Warry, officers well acquainted with the Chinese and their ways, is also a guarantee that the frontier policy will be a sound and consistent one.

GAOL ADMINISTRATION IN INDIA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Reports of Indian gaol administration are often as noteworthy for the information which they exclude as for that which is contained in them. One might, for instance, read through the year's record of an Indian gaol without meeting with a specific reminder of the practice of making prisoners sleep in association. This feature of the internal economy will seem especially reprehensible to any one acquainted with the system followed in English gaols, in which all prisoners sleep and most of them work in their own cells, the leading principle acted on being that association and inter-communication of criminals lead to increased demoralization, and are preventive of any deterrent or reformatory effect which prison discipline might otherwise have. In Indian gaols the number of convicts who sleep in one room varies from 30 to 100, and they are often at night subject only to the supervision of one or two fellow convicts placed in authority. Putting aside worse results, the practice of sleeping in association greatly lessens the unpleasantness of prison life, and interferes with, if it does not altogether destroy, its deterrent effect on hardened criminals. As long as "habituals" can hold converse each day with kindred spirits, prison life is shorn of much of the monotony which renders it hateful to men, accustomed, when free, to a life of constant criminal excitement. Habitual criminals are not fond of their own company. If the question be asked, why does not Government insist on the adoption of a measure so obviously necessary as the provision of separate sleeping accommodation in all prisons, the answer is that the measure would be expensive. In association the usual allowance per convict is 36 superficial feet; a sleeping cell could not be of smaller dimensions than would give a superficial area of 70 feet. Another special feature of Indian gaol management which somewhat staggers a visitor is the extent to which convicts are employed as gaol officers, and entrusted with the enforcement of discipline among their fellow-convicts. Inside an Indian gaol a paid subordinate official is seldom seen. Convict warders supervise labour, enforce discipline, and report convicts for punishment. To set a thief to catch a thief is a process familiar to the police all the world over; but to set a thief to guard a thief in gaol, and to discipline him with reformatory effect, is a measure neither generally acknowledged to be sound nor generally acted on in civilised countries. The employment of prisoners in the control of other prisoners, in positions of trust, or in the enforcement of discipline, is in England prohibited by law, because having been tried, it has been found to be productive of serious evils. Why, then, is it allowed in India? The answer must be because it saves expense. Gaol establishments used to be underpaid, and were therefore untrustworthy. By using convict officers a reduction in the number of paid subordinates is made, and the utilisation of a portion of the money thus saved in raising the emoluments of those retained became possible. For this reason—and we believe for this reason only—the measure has been generally introduced. That the system is wrong and should be prohibited we are convinced. At the Prison Conference held at Calcutta in 1877, the Bombay and Oudh representatives condemned it and exposed its evils. They were over-ruled, but their arguments were not grappled with. It was contended that the system was economical, and that it was valuable for its reformatory effect on convicts promoted to be convict officers. That it is economical in a certain sense is not disputed, but is not any economy false which blurs the line between the criminal and the honest man? The reformatory effect of service as a convict officer has been too easily assumed. Probably carefully instituted inquiries would dissipate the strength of this argument.

MORUSSIL MUNICIPALITIES IN BENGAL.

(Hindu Patriot.)

It is gratifying to note the tone of approval with which some district officers have reviewed the work of the Municipal bodies. The Commissioner of Burdwan reports "that the elective system has on the whole worked well. Many members of the Municipal committees took a lively interest in their work, and the committees, as a body, fully appreciate the responsibilities they have taken upon themselves." In the 24-Pergunnahs the Magistrate remarks "that on the whole the new Commissioners appear to me to have done their work well. Meetings are well attended, and are held more regularly than formerly, and the items of business are freely and often very warmly discussed." We could have multiplied these extracts, but we refrain from doing so. Those we have given above suffice to show that notwithstanding the various drawbacks under which the Municipal bodies have to work, they fully realise their position, and are doing a great deal of good within their local limits. Frequent complaints are made by the district officers of the "oratorical exhibitions" of the Commissioners, the consequent loss of time, waste of energy, and obstruction to work. We have heard so often of these complaints, in season and out of season, that we do not attach much importance to them. A little consideration will show that these complaints arise more from an impatience of the popular assertion of Municipal authority than from any valid grounds. To work in the dark in silence is not an attribute of popular Government. That suits the bureaucratic administration, and not the Municipal government under the present basis. It is in the nature of things that there should be warm discussions over Municipal affairs. It is impossible that all members should be of the same opinion. Difference of opinion necessitates discussion, and the length of discussion cannot always be calculated with exactitude. It is the duty of the Chairman to exercise his authority to put a stop to a speech when any irrelevant matter is introduced in it, but beyond that he would be exceeding his power if he attempted to silence a speaker. "Oratorical exhibition" is an inseparable condition of self-government, and to put a stop to it is to stifle popular government. It was the practice in the Athenian Assembly to measure a speech by the water-clock, but a device like that at the present day will be laughed to scorn. The good sense of the speakers themselves in our Municipal bodies will teach them to suit their words to the exigencies of the occasion.

ORGANISATION OF THE NATIVE ARMY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Military men in this country seem to be daily more struck, the more they give the subject their attention, with the drawbacks attending the officering, or, more correctly speaking, the want of officering, of our Native regiments. It may be accepted as an indisputable fact, that sooner or later the soldiers composing the regiments of our Native army will be called upon to face a foe who is regarded by us as an hereditary enemy; and it is seriously believed, even by those who are in no way pessimists, that the present organisation of our Native army, and especially the conditions affecting the supply of European officers, will be likely to lead to grave disaster. When, in October last, several important changes were carried out in the re-organisation of the Native army, the question of officers was left untouched. It seems to us that in all these schemes for reorganisation and defence, we scarcely take sufficiently into account the material composing the army we expect one day to oppose us. We always speak of our long-expected enemy as "a European foe," but we wonder what proportion of troops would, at the commencement of hostilities, be composed of actual Russians of pure blood. The army of Russia, enormous as it is, is not, strictly speaking, a Russian army, any more than the troops we should set in motion to defend our frontier would be an English army. Russia has taken into her ranks large numbers of Asiatics, just as we have here in India, and at the commencement of hostilities her first line to meet the first shock would be largely composed of men drawn from the peoples of Central Asia. Against these we have to set our Native troops, and we may fairly surmise that, led even by the limited number of British officers which they possess, they will prove at least an equal match for our so-called European enemy. There is another matter which has always seemed to us to call for remark, and it is this—that, in every lecture and in every paper written on the subject of our Native regiments, it seems to be taken for granted that the Native officers are scarcely worthy of being taken into account, and cannot be in any way bettered or improved upon. They are variously described as inefficient, unintelligent, or old, and past their work. Can nothing be done to improve the class of man who becomes a Native officer? It must be remembered that promotion is, almost entirely, if not altogether, from the ranks, and in what other army in the world would such a system answer? Then, again, they are men absolutely without prospects, and consequently devoid of ambition; and are these conditions likely to bring exceptional men to the front? The Russian army is admirably served by Asiatics of high military rank, and why should such men not be found among our ranks? English education has produced many Indian gentlemen who possess all the attributes of Englishmen; and if education can do this for them, surely some means can be found of producing a better class of Native officer than those who are every day put aside, by military writers who know them best, as men of no account.

(Madras Mail.)

"The twenty-fifth annual report of the Burma Bible and Tract Society for the year 1886," which has just reached us, contains additional interest from the fact of its dealing with a period of unusual disturbance. The general tone of the reports indicates that, temporarily, the endeavours of the society to flood Burma with Christian literature were much hampered.

"I have made less use of the publications of the society this year than in any former year, partly because the Karens as a rule cannot use them, and partly because the Burmese are less inclined than formerly to read and buy Christian books. During the past year I have found the Burmese people generally sour and sullen, and in no state of mind to listen to the Gospel message."

Thus writes the Rev. Dr. Rose, of Rangoon, one of the society's veteran and most energetic members. But it was not only to the Natives of the country that the committee turned their attention. When Burma began to be flooded with troops they made every endeavour to provide the army, British and Native, with the literature it is their aim to disseminate; and two men were engaged to accompany it in the field. These efforts, however, failed; and the army went forth spiritually unprovided. It is believed that there were some zealous clergymen of varying shades of opinion at Mandalay, but the vast majority of our troops, even in the large posts along the Irrawaddy, never saw such a thing as a parson, unless it was occasionally a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, for months at a time. The Bible and Tract Society of course had nothing to do with that; but it seems a pity that if there were not sufficient clergymen to circulate beyond the contracted orbit of Mandalay, the society's books and leaflets should not have been accepted and sent round. Tommy Atkins is not, as a rule, very fond of imbibing that form of literature, but, at the time, he had nothing to read, and would have been very glad to get the tracts. Efforts were afterwards made to get papers, &c., for the hospitals, and these somewhat relieved the tedium of his experiences of Burma in 1886. The society is still hopeful, and it trusts that it may circulate a much larger number of works in the current year than it did in the past, and there is every reason to anticipate that it will.

Perhaps because he had a paucity of Missionary news to give, Dr. Rose contributes a most interesting paper on the political aspects of the situation as they existed in 1886; from a perusal of which one rises with a feeling of intense regret that it was not given to the Times to secure Dr. Rose as its correspondent. That broad and liberal views on subjects of general policy are compatible with sincere friendship for the Native races it affects is eminently shown by Dr. Rose; and it is men of his type that are wanted every now and then to convey information to the ignorant and impressionable masses at home on the passing circumstances of outlying portions of the Empire with which they are necessarily unacquainted. There was a good deal of nonsense talked at one time about how the disturbed condition of Lower Burma proved that, after a quarter of a century of our rule the people of that province yet pined to escape from it to, presumably, the milder mercies of a Theebaw. Dr. Rose disposes of it very shortly. "It seems to me," he says, "a better understanding of the present state of affairs, and of the cause and character of the trouble, will be gained by taking into the count several facts as factors. One in ten (at least) of the Burmans is a vagabond, not from inanity—not from feebleness of body or mind—quite the reverse. With strength and vigour, and wits as sharp needles, and with a touch of the dash and the daring, he is an 'idler' yet, par excellence, a 'busybody,' and 'ripe' at all seasons and burning for dacoity, on the cropping out of an occasion. Such persons do not stop to parley about the character of the Government any more than mosquitoes stop to discuss the social status of their victim's before plunging their proboscis through the epididymis for blood. The typical Burman is instinctively a marauder, a dacoit. As ducks take to the water, as bees to the clover, so Burmans take to plunder. It is to them what the 'chase' and the 'war path' are to the American Indians."

There is not only the dacoit instinct but the dacoit "caste" in Burma.

"This dah mya (dacoit) class, while not identical with the military, was nevertheless often largely incorporated into the Royal army, specially in times of great emergency. The large numbers of soldiers who were allowed to walk away with their arms at the surrender of Mandalay were no doubt mostly professional dacoits, and they are the causes of much of the trouble in Upper Burma."

And he sums up:—

"What really is the Burmese estimate of English Rule? By the mass of the more intelligent and of the more industrious, both traders and cultivators, it is greatly preferred to Native Rule. For twenty years the Burmans have freely confessed that, under the English Government, there is, for the most part, peace, safety, and protection; with all the personal liberty compatible with law and order. Taxes are heavy, but labour is high and trade good, and the products of the soil command good prices, and the people as a rule can well afford to pay their taxes. Oppression and extortion are reduced to the minimum. There are the means, the inducements, and ample safety for amassing wealth. This could never be said under Burmese Government. Railways, tramways, roads, bridges, canals, telegraphs, postal arrangements, steamboats, steam mills, &c., &c., would never have come under Burmese rule, nor would oppression and extortion have ceased under it."

Again, Dr. Rose says there are two elements of thought and feeling that have much to do with the present abnormal amount of crime and long-continued turmoil in Lower Burma, viz., race feeling and religious feeling.

"But those who share most in the race and religious feelings are (excepting the priests) of the more intelligent and well disposed, and would be the last to engage in dacoity, or to take up arms against the English Government. They know that the English Government has been exceeding tender of Buddhism in Burma; they know, too, the folly of taking up arms against the Government. This race feeling, and this religious feeling we can appreciate; and we sympathize with men who are moved by them; they indicate Native manhood, honour, force of character. But it is my conviction that those engaged in actual dacoity have the least of these feelings, and are not at all swayed by them. I am bold to say that but for the dacoit instinct—the love and thirst for plunder in the Burmese—the race and religious feeling would hardly produce a ripple on the surface of the political waters."

That phoongyis were frequently found amongst the bands dispersed by the troops was a fact full of import for those ignorant of local circumstances, and pregnant to them of the inference that the priesthood were leading on a people determined to fight unitedly to the last for their religion. It was, of course, nothing of the sort.

"Not a few of these priests were thieves and robbers before they became priests. They shaved their heads and donned the yellow robe to escape the prison, or to save their necks. They are now following their strongest instincts, and in some cases have only returned to their former occupation. These bands, though organised and controlled largely by the priest, prey upon villages of their own race and religion. . . . The priests are no more the friends of the English Government than of Christian Missions. They have much to do with the present troubles of the country, and if heartily in favour of peace, law, and order, could do more to tranquillize the country than the military and police forces combined."

It is one of the most curious objects of speculation amongst the many that are offered him, to the Englishman who first visits Burma, how the people can extend the reverence they undoubtedly do to the wearers of the yellow robe, drawn as these may be even from the criminal classes. There is nothing to prevent a dacoit, red with the blood of his fellow-countrymen and women, shaving his head, and retiring for peace and security when the chase grows uncomfortably near, to a phoongyi kyong; and many such cases must have occurred since our occupation of Mandalay. When he thinks the pursuit has been abandoned, the ex-dacoit has simply to emerge from his umbrageous retreat, and resume his equally shady method of life. And yet, while he has on the garments characteristic of the holy fraternity, public opinion extends to him the deference borrowed from the colour of his raiment; and his clothes, like charity, are found sufficient to cover a multitude of sins. Dr. Rose closes his paper with a heavy indictment against the phoongyis, and the pertinent query, "why are the Burmese men" (all trained in the kyongs) "lazy, idle, and easily given to crime, while the women are industrious, hard-working, and fairly well disposed?" But into that it is unnecessary to follow him here. It is undoubtedly the fact that the phoongyis can, if they like, do much towards assisting in the establishment of law and order; and we can only hope now that Sir Frederick Roberts has gone out of his way to pat the chief mendicant on the back, that they will do so. Dr. Rose is confident that anarchy will soon cease; and, as usual, he appears to be supported in his view by facts.

(Behar Herald.)

Mr. Frederick Pincott, of London, who is a well-known Oriental scholar, has written a most interesting and important letter to the Lahore Tribune. The writer, it is needless to say, feels a deep interest in the welfare of this country, and he is prepared to do all that lies in his power to advance its prosperity. He assures us that the people of England generally, of all grades of society and of all political parties, sincerely and earnestly desire for the moral and material prosperity of India and for the good Government of this country. But the difficulty is, that they do not know the real state of things existing here. Mr. Pincott rightly holds that what is wanted in England is an accurate knowledge of facts; and that it is in the power of India alone to supply this want. In the letter under notice he seeks for information on two points. He writes:—"The first question I should like to ask is, whether it is a fact that the Police of India generally are more dreaded by the honest citizen than by the habitual criminal? Is it a fact that the police do not hesitate to resort to torture for the purpose of extorting confessions from people arrested for offences? I have been seriously informed by men I believe to be veracious, that citizens will submit in silence to be robbed by thieves rather than call in the police, from a conviction that the exactions of the police would be worse than the loss already suffered at the hands of robbers. It is not necessary to dwell at length on the exactions, cruelties, and wrongs with which I have heard the police charged; but the object of this letter is to elicit information, not to make accusations. It is clear that those who have suffered must know what they and their friends have undergone; and many who may not have suffered themselves must be aware of the truth or falsity of the statements." The second point on which Mr. Pincott seeks for information is the existence or non-existence of bribery in India. He is informed that bribery is widely prevalent in the land in the shape of certain customary and other offerings, made by subordinates to their superiors, and by citizens to the officials residing among them. Mr. Pincott thus concludes his letter:—"It is not impossible that some people, who may know the truth regarding the two questions I have asked, may be disinclined to print and openly authenticate their statements. For the benefit of such timid ones I append my address, so that they may send privately what they are disinclined to make public. Should anyone avail himself of this means, he can write in English, Urdu, Hindi, or Punjabi, as he pleases. It is, however, essential that, to make any communication useful, every alleged instance of wrong must be accompanied by the date of its occurrence, the name of the place where it occurred, and the names of the people said to be concerned in it. Such information will give a solid basis for action." We hope our subscribers, readers, and friends, will respond to Mr. Pincott's invitation. His address is 25, Wilson-road, Camberwell, London.

HINDU LAW AND ENGLISH PENALTIES.

(Bombay Gazette.)

Now that the champions of orthodoxy in all directions are tremblingly admitting that it may seem a harsh, and must therefore be an impolitic thing to send a woman to gaol because she will not live with a man whom she never consented to marry, it may be worth while to call attention to a judgment of the High Court of Calcutta, in which the course that our neighbours are beginning to recognize would be cruel, and might cause scandal is represented as being opposed to law as well as to the sentiment of a reasonably enlightened public. We do not put forward the appeal of Gatharam Mistree v. Moobita Kochin, which was heard by Justices Markby and Mitter in 1875 as anything in the nature of a revelation. It was cited by Sir Charles Sargent in the judgment which he and Mr. Justice Bayley gave against Rukhmibai a year ago, though the Court on that occasion gave less weight to it than they perhaps might have done. We admit, too, that amongst the many things that have happened since then has been the passing of the new Code of Criminal Procedure, with its provision in Section 260 for enforcing by imprisonment, or seizure of property, or both, a decree for the restitution of conjugal rights. But this question can most conveniently and most profitably be discussed from the points of view of equity of public policy, and looked at from those points of view Mr. Justice Markby's judgment, despite the specific refusal of the Bombay High Court to be bound by it, and despite the legislative provisions that have been made in the interval, is peculiarly instructive. The question whether there had been a valid marriage was not seriously in contention. The Court found that there had been a marriage, and they ordered the Lower Court to re-try the case on that assumption. But as in the Court of First Instance a decree had been made in a form which the Appellate Court deemed irregular, Mr. Justice Markby entered at great length into the question of the mode of enforcement, if any were legally allowed, of decrees for the restitution of conjugal rights. The Court found neither doubt nor difficulty in declaring that suits of this character would lie. The real difficulty arose when it had to deal with a refusal to perform conjugal duties by one of the parties to the marriage after the existence of the matrimonial relations had been ascertained. The husband's rights having been ascertained—and in this particular case, unlike that of Rukhmibai, there had been sustained cohabitation—the question was whether or not there were any means of enforcing them. One hypothetical mode, that of seizing and making over the recreant party bodily to the claimant, was glanced at only to be severely set aside as "wholly abhorrent to the Hindu law." Orthodox invokers of the law courts for the assertion of the subjection of the wife will endorse this view of the matter. A habeas corpus of this kind would fit in well enough with the marriage by capture which was fashionable with the aborigines of Australia, and is not unknown amongst some of the non-Aryan inhabitants of India, with whom a pleasing preliminary to the marriage ceremony was the stunning of the bride by a disciplinary club wielded by the bridegroom. Restitution by seizure, then, is as much out of the question as marriage by capture. The alternative method of enforcing the decree,—if it must be enforced—is that of imprisonment, and on this point Mr. Justice Markby's observations are so instructive that it is a pity that more prominence was not given to them by the Bombay High Court, even though the Court had cited them only to set them aside. If we have to deal with the equities of the case, and then to discuss from the point of view of public policy the question whether we can tolerate a system under which imprisonment is to be the penalty for marital repugnance, it is surely of the first importance to know what the law of civilized nations has to say on the subject. It will not surprise our readers to learn that in France the learned Judge found that the question had been settled against compulsion. We cited the other day a remarkable case which had come before the French Courts in which, while the husband's rights were acknowledged, he was refused the satisfaction of seeing his wife punished for not yielding to them. The records of that particular case do not show if the husband was satisfied with the decree which he wrested from the Court. But Mr. Justice Markby discourages the notion that the assertion by the Court of a merely declaratory jurisdiction in cases of this kind would be empty and unprofitable. It might be valuable to some men to have a formal declaration that they were the rightful lords over their reluctant wives as it would be to others to have a declaration to the contrary. Mr. Justice Markby, then, "did not think it likely that any one would contend that the bare declaration of the existence of the relation, even if not relief in the technical sense of the term, was not of the greatest value and assistance to the parties." In the case before the Court it obviously was, since an attempt on the part of the defendant had been made to dispute the validity of the marriage. However, it is not in France alone that the Courts have refused to exercise more than a declaratory function in this matter. Everywhere the right of the husband to maintain a suit against a wife who refuses to acknowledge his marital rights is recognised. But in nearly every country the attempt to enforce marital duty by compulsion has been abandoned. The Prussian Courts have expressly refused to exercise any compulsion whatever. The leaning in Austria is strongly in the same direction, and the only trace of compulsion which Mr. Justice Markby found in the course of his inquiries was in some of the smaller German States, where a very small fine or few days' simple imprisonment appear to be allowed, and if this produced no effect no further punishment could be inflicted. In England, as we have shown, the coercive powers of the Courts in these cases had been allowed to become virtually obsolete before recent legislation formally abolished it. Lastly, the United States Courts have never attempted to enforce the performance of conjugal duties, and the inference which Mr. Justice Markby drew from his wide survey of the practice followed in these matters is that as there is nothing which leads to the supposition that the Hindu law is less humane than that of other civilised countries, or that severer penalties are required here in case of matrimonial differences than have been found effectual elsewhere, there was no ground for enforcing a declaration of marital right by the stern procedure provided for in the Code. It is that aspect of the question, and not its purely legal aspects, which the orthodox approvers of these proceedings against Rukhmibai will do well to pay regard to. If they think it to their interest to appear the champions of a procedure less humane than that of other civilised countries they will persevere with all the obstinacy which can be put forth in behalf of a bad cause. But though they affect sometimes to be indifferent to outside opinion there have of late been some very significant tokens of sensitiveness on the part of some of them, warranting the belief that they would almost as gladly as other people see the practice of the Indian Courts freed from so compromising an element as that in question. If they wish to stand well with the world around them they cannot do better than join hands with other people in endeavouring to bring about—to quote the words of a document with which we daresay they are familiar, "the removal of the anomaly involved in punishing disobedience to a decree based on Hindoo matrimonial law by the penalty of imprisonment which is entirely unknown to that law and is created by British rule of Civil Procedure."

BENGAL.

THERE was a scene in the High Court when Mrs. Morgan, the respondent in the recent divorce case, attended in obedience to the order of the Court and produced her little girl, eight years of age, who, by the terms of the decree in the divorce suit, is to be made over to the custody of the father, Captain Morgan. The child protested that she would not live with her father, and had to be separated from her mother by the officers of the Court.

A WELL-KNOWN firm in Calcutta lately sent to the Collector a cheque on the Chartered Mercantile Bank in payment of their income-tax, but the cheque was returned with the information that only cheques upon the Bank of Bengal could be taken. The firm refused to pay the tax in any other form than by the cheque previously sent, and stated that they did not require a receipt for the tax until after the proceeds of the cheque had been realised and the amount credited in the Bank of Bengal; and thus the matter remains at present.

At a general meeting of the Behar Landholders' Association it was unanimously resolved to present an address of welcome to the new Lieutenant-Governor, and a draft address was adopted. The Beharies are very proud of Sir Steuart Bayley's elevation, his name being a household word in Behar.

THE Hindoo Herald is convinced that, "but for the services of the much-abused Bengali Babus, the British Government could not exist for a day. If the Babus cease to help the Government in preserving internal peace the low classes would at once find an opportunity to raise their heads and to set the law and the authorities at defiance. But for the Babu police officers, the Babu jailors, and the Babu magistrates the government of the country would be simply impossible. We ask Sir Lepel and other officials of the same genus to consider well what the case would have been in the perilous time of the Sepoy War if the Babus had then invited the mutineers to come down to Bengal or advised the ryots of the indigo districts to take advantage of the opportunity for getting rid of their oppressors by following the example of the mutineers."

BABOO DIRRENDRA NATH PAL has found it necessary to again warn the public not to put too high a value on mass meetings in Bengal. He writes to the Englishman:—"I have been seeing in the newspapers since last month telegraphic messages of mass meetings. Lest your readers consider them to be real affairs, seeing their repetition this year, I have thought it necessary to write to you one or two words. As I said last year they were nothing but tricks to humbug the Government, I repeat that the mass meetings this year are no better business. But, fortunately, we do not hear of monster ryot meetings with a lakh or 50, 30, and 20 thousands, or with some such fabulous number of men. This year they are not ryots' meetings, but simple mass meetings with a reasonable number of people. When you see, sir, the same resolutions, with same wordings, carried 'unanimously' in every such meeting, and invariably at the end a branch Indian association is formed, you, of course, see through the matter. As for the gentlemen who delight in calling themselves our leaders, and who are at the bottom of these meetings, they are neither 'fish' nor 'flesh,' not even 'red herring.' Their worth is known by the simple fact that they are neither Hindus, nor Mahomedans, nor Christians: they are neither Natives nor Europeans. They will tell you that they are Theists and New-Indians. So you see they are a new species."

MADRAS.

THE new Town Hall of Madras is rapidly approaching completion; and it is hoped that, on the 20th June, Jubilee day, it will be available for the purposes for which it has been designed.

A FIRE broke out at the works of Messrs. Pierce, Leslie and Co. at Cochin, when local produce worth from half to three-quarters of a lakh was destroyed. It was insured.

MRS. SULLIVAN, the wife of Lieutenant Rupert Sullivan, Madras Staff Corps, has been killed at Madras. The horses in her brougham bolted, and Mrs. Sullivan, instead of remaining quietly seated, jumped out of the conveyance, fell, and fractured the base of her skull. The horses were afterwards pulled up by the coachman, who behaved remarkably well throughout. The Madras Mail, in the course of its description of the accident, discloses a circumstance of a peculiarly painful nature:—"By the time Mr. Sullivan arrived his wife was almost past hope of recovery, and he rushed into a small retail shop close to the Round Tannah to procure a stimulant; but the shopkeeper most inhumanly declined to give the spirit without payment. Some little delay ensued, but eventually the brandy was given to Mr. Sullivan on another gentleman, one Mr. D. Roque, pledging his gold watch with the shopkeeper." Mr. Eardley Norton, Coroner, held an inquest on the body of Mrs. Sullivan, and the jury, consisting of Captain J. H. Taylor, Mr. E. B. Powell, Major Sydney Smith, Lieutenant R. N. Taylor and Mr. Henry Scott, returned a verdict of "accidental death," attributable to the fact that the splinter bar of the brougham was not sufficiently strong in make.

BOMBAY.

It is now regarded in well-informed circles that Mr. Lee-Warner will succeed General Goodfellow as Secretary to the Bombay Government in the Public Works Department.

THE Bombay Gazette says:—"At the time of the Jubilee we published an address to be presented to Her Majesty by the Chiefs of Kattiawar, and also gave a description of the beautiful golden casket in which it is to be enclosed. At first it was intended to forward it through the usual channel, the happy idea of presenting it through a deputation from their number being an afterthought. Once thought of, however, it was not allowed to drop: the Thakore Sahab of Gondal being in England already, and the Chiefs of Morvi and Limdi being willing to go, the deputation was made up. The Kattiawar Chiefs conjointly requested that their Political Agent, Colonel Wodehouse, might be deputed to go in charge, and this has been acceded to. The three Chiefs have been educated at the Rajkumar College, and speak English well, and are in every way worthy representatives. The deputation left in the Peshawar on the 6th of May. The address is signed by all the Jurisdictional Chiefs of the Provinces, the signatories being over ninety. The Kattiawar feudatories have certainly well done their part in the Jubilee. They celebrated it most loyally at their capitals, they gave Rs. 160,000 for a public hall and museum to be erected at Rajkot, and there was hardly one of any importance who did not in his own State dedicate funds for some permanent memorial of the occasion."

On the 19th instant, the day after his resignation, Sir Salar Jung wrote to Colonel Marshall the following letter:—"Now that I have resigned office I write a line to tender you my most grateful thanks for all the assistance I have received at your hands ever since your arrival in Hyderabad, which greatly facilitated the carrying on of administrative work. Our official relations have ever been most pleasant and agreeable, and it was always a pleasure to me to work with you. Owing to my continued ill-health, I have been compelled, as you are aware, to send in my resignation to his Highness, who, I must say, has treated me in a most princely and generous manner. He has not only agreed to pay off the debts contracted by my late father, but he has also been graciously pleased to confer an allowance on me of Rs. 7,000 per month. For this act of generosity, and for all the other kindness I have received at his Highness's hands, I am truly and deeply grateful to him. I shall ever by word and deed prove my gratitude and my loyalty to his Highness, who has ever been to me the kindest and most forbearing of masters, and in whose service I am ready to lay down my life. After his Highness I am deeply grateful to you for all that you have done in getting me these concessions. I knew that, without your exertion in my behalf, I should not have been given such favourable terms, and for this I and my family are under great obligations to you. I wish you a prosperous and successful career in Hyderabad."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

MR. H. GRAY succeeds Mr. Sterndale as Agent of the Bank of Bengal at Cawnpore.

THE Civil and Military Gazette says that, in spite of all precautions and remedial measures adopted, anthrax is still prevalent among the Horse Artillery and Cavalry horses at Umballa.

A SHARP shock of earthquake was felt at Palampur at midnight on April 22. This is the fourth that has been recorded in the Kangra Valley since the commencement of the present year. Severe shocks of earthquake were also felt at Peshawar, Rawalpindi and Murree.

ANOTHER of the large bridges which mark this year's railway construction work will shortly be opened. The last girders of the bridge over the Jhelum at Chack Nizam was erected a few days ago, and a short time will see the work finished. This bridge, some seventy miles below the first Jhelum bridge, will connect the North-Western with the Sind-Sagar Railway, and open communication between Lahore and Dera Ismail Khan, and the salt mines at Khewrah and the coal mines at Dhundote close by.

A LAHORE TALE.—The Civil and Military Gazette says:—"He was a clever candidate for University honours at a recent examination in the Punjab, and loyal withal. But they sent him a Euclid paper, and Euclid is a stumbling-block to the student. He remembered, mechanically, the figures of the propositions, and very readily drew and lettered them. Here his knowledge ended; so below each perfectly correct diagram he wrote out the whole of 'God Save the Queen,' studded it with 'wherefores' and 'because,' and wound up with a triumphant Q. E. D. The National Anthem written jerkily does somewhat resemble a Euclid proposition, and the candidate hoped that the examiner would, seeing that the diagrams were correct, forbear to look down the page. Herein he was disappointed."

It is announced that the Indian Government is actively taking up the cause of the decaying silk industry. A collection of Indian cocoons is being made which will be sent to Manchester, where it will be open for inspection. Infected cocoons are to be sent to France for examination by M. Pasteur's pupils, who, it is hoped, will be able to suggest means for checking the disease which has nearly ruined the industry. The mercantile community has promised to co-operate.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

CAPTAIN F. G. T. WELCH, S. C., on the completion of twenty years' service, has been promoted to a Majority.

FURLOUGH to Europe for six months on medical certificate has been granted to Brevet-Major S. Watson, Brigade-Major, Poona.

LEAVE has been granted to Lieut. R. H. Light, S. C., 17th Bo. I., for one year on private affairs.

COL. W. M. DUCAT, R. E., Superintending Engineer, N. D., goes on a year's furlough to Europe on private affairs.

COLONEL S. J. DOIG, S. C., has been appointed Cantonment Magistrate Malegaon, vice Colonel Bythell, and has received the powers of a Magistrate of the first-class.

It has been directed that the cavalry Corps of Guides shall be organized in three squadrons, consisting of six British officers and 469 native rank and file.

CAPTAIN A. V. PAYNE, 2nd Battalion Wiltshire Regiment, has been appointed to officiate as Aide-de-Camp to Sir Hugh Gough, Commanding the Lahore Division.

LIEUT. F. W. J. CAULFIELD, S. C., 10th Bo. I., has been granted leave out of India, on private affairs, for one year, and similar leave has been taken by Major Forjett, S. C., 4th Bo. I., for six months, on urgent private affairs.

THE resignation of Captain W. Crocker as Paymaster of the Bombay Volunteer Corps, and the appointment of Quartermaster A. F. Soundy, with the honorary rank of Captain, to the post, are gazetted.

LIEUT. STANLEY M. EDWARDES, 1st Battalion North Lancashire Regiment, has been admitted to the Bombay Staff Corps, subject to the confirmation of the Secretary of State for India, and Lieut. Thomas Moss, 2nd Durham Light Infantry, has been appointed a probationer for the same Corps.

LEAVE has been granted to Lieut. C. H. Price, S. C., 27th Bo. I., for one year, on medical certificate, and to Lieut. Col. V. Birch, S. C., Commandant, 9th Bo. I., for one year, on private affairs. Captain H. S. B. Hodgkinson, North Lancashire Regiment, Adjutant; B. V. R. Corps, has been allowed furlough to Europe for four months, on private affairs.

THE following appointments have been made:—8th Bengal Infantry.—Lieutenant-Colonel C. J. Walter, Second-in-Command, to be Commandant, vice Colonel R. Smith, vacated; Major A. Fiske, Wing Commander, to be Second-in-Command, vice Lieutenant-Colonel Walter; Captain G. D. C. Gastrell, Wing Officer, to be Wing Commander; and Lieutenant G. M. Evans, attached to the regiment, to be permanent Wing Officer. 22nd Punjab Infantry.—Lieutenant G. E. Rogers, King's Own Borderers, to be officiating Wing Officer on probation. 27th Punjab Infantry.—Lieutenant A. W. Warden, Hampshire Regiment, to be officiating Wing Officer on probation. 12th Bengal Cavalry.—Lieutenant H. Kennedy, from the 1st Bengal Infantry, to be officiating Squadron Officer on probation. 19th Bengal Lancers.—Lieutenant F. de H. Smith, from the 24th Punjab Infantry, to be Officiating Squadron Officer on probation.

SIR THOMAS BAKER has recommended that three months' special leave be given to officers who have served in Burma from the date of their return to their own Presidency.

CAPTAIN MUIR, of the Viceroy's Body Guard, goes with the Native Cavalry officers to England for the Queen's Jubilee.

THE Native officers who are to go to England to take part in the Jubilee procession will be chosen as follows:—From the Governor-General's Bodyguard, 1; from the Bengal Cavalry, 5; from the Punjab Cavalry and Guides Corps, 2; from the Hyderabad Contingent, 1; from the Central India Horse, 1. The Madras Cavalry will contribute one and the Bombay Cavalry two. The fortunate thirteen will, of course, be given free passages to and from London, and they will, besides, receive £1 a day in addition to their full Indian pay and allowances all the time they are actually in England, and will have a suitable residence provided for them. They will be mounted on English horses, but will, of course, take their own arms, saddlery, and harness equipment.

SUCH troops of the Quetta garrison as may require change to a hill climate are not to be sent to the Ziarat sanatorium this season, that very elevated and barren spot having little or nothing to recommend it. Instead of going to Ziarat a certain proportion of men will be sent to camp on the Khojak, which is quite high enough to give the necessary change, and they will, we understand, be employed in improving the military road over the range from Killa Abdulla to Chaman, as the existing gradients are too severe. It may be just as well, remarks an up-country paper, to explain the above arrangement, as otherwise the appearance of a British encampment on the Khwaja Amran range might at the present moment be misinterpreted both in Afghanistan and India.

It is understood that the Indian Government have so far decided in favour of the fodder compressed by the process patented by Mr. Arthur Rogers, C. E., that they purpose giving it a practical trial. Colonel Jamieson has been instructed to proceed to Saharunpore and see a thousand bales of fodder pressed off by the Rogers' method. These bales will then be put on the backs of 100 mules and 100 camels, which will march them about the country for six months, so as to test, we presume, whether the fodder will not deteriorate with long keeping or under variations of season and climate. The bales will be unpacked in October, and, if the fodder is then found to be sweet and good, Government may offer some terms to Mr. Rogers. There the matter at present stands.

THE FUTURE OF BENGAL.

The text of Sir Stuart Bayley's speech in reply to the deputation which presented him with an address of welcome (April 14) was as follows:—

Gentlemen,—Allow me to express my sincere thanks for the kindness which prompted you and your fellow signatories to offer me this address of welcome, and for the trouble you, gentlemen of the deputation, have taken in coming to present it. I am well aware that the flattering terms in which you speak of my past career and of my qualifications for the high office on which I have just entered should not be taken too literally, and it behoves me to accept them rather as the applause which is bestowed by a kindly audience on the nervous and hesitating speaker at the outset of his speech by way of encouragement, and as assuring him of the sympathy and good-will of his audience, rather than as the merited cheers which greet and reward the well-graced orator when his performance is finished. You say, gentlemen, that the advent of a new ruler always awakens high hopes and expectations. I, on my part, am not insensible of the profound wisdom of the sarcastic proverb quoted by King Ahab, "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off," and, under the influence of this feeling, I am chary, even at the risk of seeming ungracious, of saying much about myself or any policy in reply to your address. You rightly estimate the task before me as one of great difficulty, and you indicate one among the very numerous elements of that difficulty when you point to "conflicting interests," and express a hope that the province will be "freed from all discord" during my tenure of office. I need not doubt that in these words you allude primarily, though not exclusively, to the great difficulty of race friction. In regard to the duty of a Local Government (putting aside the higher questions of policy which are dealt with elsewhere) is to be guided by the strictest impartiality in its own actions, and to see that its officers maintain the same spirit. In other words, its duty is to watch rather than to act. But, gentlemen, the common sense and good feeling of moderate men of both parties has always done something, I believe, to restore harmony, and if only time be given for this feeling to operate, and if the leaders and public writers of both parties will ever use a spirit of mutual forbearance and respect of courtesy and self-restraint, I feel sure that the efforts of the community itself will do more good than any Government can do in this direction. Time is on their side. "Wait, my faith is large in time, and that which shapes it to some perfect end." You add a hope, gentlemen, that we may be entering on a period of prosperity. It is thirteen years since Bengal has been afflicted with anything serious in the way of drought or famine, and to the believers in the cycle theory this should have a very ominous significance. In that theory, however, as a practical guide to action, I do not believe, and I see no reason why Bengal should not continue to be blessed with a series of bountiful harvests. But I can never forget how small is the margin in Bengal between production and consumption, and how easily the vicissitudes of the season may absorb that margin. Much has been done, no doubt, to enable us to meet to some extent this danger, should it come, and we are in a far better position in this respect than we were ten or fifteen years ago; but, nevertheless, the danger is there, and it is still a danger of appalling dimensions, and must always be a source of unceasing anxiety to any ruler of Bengal. "Prosperity," too, requires definition. We have been told on good authority in the course of the bi-metallic controversy that the prosperity of the country may be increased by the only causes which threaten with ruin the financial prosperity of the Government of that country. However this may be, in this sense the country may prosper, one thing I must warn you of. There is no chance whatever of any administration being marked by that financial prosperity which is the only basis on which it is possible to rear a superstructure of administrative reform and of material progress. The Government of India have had to choose between additional taxation and the reduction of provincial resources. Very wisely they have chosen the latter alternative, but this means in any case a long postponement of certain visions of administrative and material development which I have built up, and which I see fade before me like castles in the air. Never, till I came to examine the Bengal Provincial Budget did I fully realise the bitterness "of that eternal want of pence which vexes public men." There is nothing for it but by the strictest economy and retrenchment to make our diminished resources go as far as possible; but though one may meet one's altered circumstances with a stout heart, the fact that our resources are woefully diminished can never be otherwise than an unwelcome one. I will not detain you longer, gentlemen, but, again thanking you for your address, I will end my reply by reciprocating your good wishes and reiterating your hope that the province may long be blessed with peace and prosperity--(applause).

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SILVER STORE.*

Mr. Baring-Gould has conceived the happy notion of robing in the garments of verse some of the legends of mediæval times; and what more suitable for such a purpose than those fanciful superstitions and pious traditions which have come down to us from the days when religion was a reality, when chivalry was an honoured institution, and a belief in the unseen world a factor in daily life. The very atmosphere of the times is laden with poetic sentiment, and it is scarce matter of surprise that the talented author has succeeded in presenting to the public a work which they may read with pleasure, and, perchance, study with profit. In this busy, ease-taking, sceptical, matter-of-fact century, it is well now and again that we carry back our imaginations to periods the like of which are not fated even to appear again in the world's history; it is profitable to linger for a few moments amidst scenes which take us away from ourselves and make us reflect and ponder. Who, for instance, is not the better for glancing at the "Mother Love," a sweet tale of a devoted matron, who, to keep life in her tender offspring

"With a kiss to it imparted Half the Sacramental Bread."

Who cannot read the lesson of life taught in the legend of the Building of St. Sophia, where a Cæsar is humbled and a poor widow is exalted; he because he gave in pride out of the boundlessness of his wealth; she, because with simplicity of heart and amidst the pressure of poverty, she consecrated to the glory of God a mere handful of straw—'twas all she had:—

"Small though thy gift, it was the gift of love,
And is accepted of our King above."

What soul cannot feel touched with the earnest anxiety of poor Blind Austen, to see if for a moment, the light of day—not, perhaps, so much that he might revel for a few brief moments amidst the beauties of creation, but that he might behold his little unseen daughter, the sole joy of his heart and home. Who does not wipe away a tear of joy when the old man's wish is realised, and Heaven casts aside—though but for an instant—the scales which darken his eyes, and the aged shepherd

"Now beheld the little maiden,
Kneeling in a golden beam,
Tranced in wondering devotion
Like an angel in a dream!"

But why add to the list? The volume teems with such beauties as these—beauties which appeal to the higher and nobler instincts of poor fallen humanity—beauties which call us away from the grovelling and care-loaded earth, and enable us to loiter—albeit the stay is brief and fitful—amidst the portals of a higher and nobler mansion, where the vices and weaknesses of mankind find an entrance, and all is love and peace. To do this is the mission of "Silver Store," and to have succeeded demands a debt of gratitude to Mr. Baring-Gould, which, so far as we are concerned, we are pleased and proud to acknowledge and avow.

SHOOTING AND YACHTING.†

Yachtsmen skim the seas in all parts of the Universe; they are "here, there, and everywhere," yet but few venture into the Mediterranean waters. Why is this? Mr. Bagot supplies the answer. The weather is so fearfully treacherous that it is at times well-nigh impossible to take in sail quick enough to save the spars. True, warning is generally, perhaps invariably, given by the barometer, but if sailing is to be put aside whenever the mercury is falling, there would be but little progress made in a day. Nor is a calm always unattended with danger, for when making for harbour with a spanking breeze, should the wind, as is often the case in these waters, suddenly lull, there is a risk that the current may sweep the vessel on to a rock. No, the Mediterranean may be nice, but it can be terribly nasty. Still, Mr. Bagot and his party contrived to screw a fair amount of enjoyment out of their eight months trip, and, mirabile dictu, the cost was not extravagant; but then all yachtsmen do not possess that gentleman's experience, hence the waste and "bills," which make the luxury of a private vessel confined to the very few with long purses and a large balance at their bankers. If the volume under review did no more than show how to set about a yachting trip economically, and yet comfortably, its appearance would be welcome in many a circle; but if to this boon be added the pleasure of good reading and interesting chit-chat, Mr. Bagot's work ought to find a ready sale and many purchasers.

THE SWEET O' THE YEAR.*

In "The Sweet o' the Year" Mr. Buxton does not rely upon sensationalism for effect, but trusts rather to simplicity and homely scenes for the interest of his tale; but what is perhaps most to be commended in this very readable story is that it is "good" without being "goody"—its moral is sound, its teaching is wholesome; few of the characters are puritanical or hypocritical, and the isolated instances to the contrary are evidently introduced by way of satire.

It is not asserted on our part; doubtless Mr. Buxton himself would disavow any such pretension that his novelette lays any claim to fine writing or to take a place amidst imperishable works of fiction. But the tale is pleasant, pretty, modest, unassuming, and, withal, free from any taint of impropriety. Well adapted for persons of younger years, it might with advantage be read by all who can venerate truth and candour, and despise the ways of wickedness and deceit.

MESSRS. DEAN AND SON, of Fleet-street, have in the press an important work, to be published immediately, prepared by Professor P. L. Simmonds, entitled "The British Roll of Honour," giving a descriptive account, with coloured and plain illustrations, of the various recognised orders of chivalry, British and foreign, of different countries, and of the British subjects now living who have received decorations in these orders during Her Majesty's reign.

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"The Anglo Indian Codes," by Whitley Stokes, D.C.L. Vol. I. "Substantive Law." (Clarendon Press); "The Agricultural Ports of India," by Surgeon-General E. Balfour. (Quaritch.)

THE diminution in the number of married soldiers in India, caused by the short service system, is showing its effects in the decrease of the number of pupils at the Lawrence Asylums. These institutions, in memory of Sir Henry Lawrence, were established to afford a sound education to the children of European soldiers. They are situated in healthy hill stations, and a Calcutta paper thinks it might be well worth the attention of the Government to consider whether, now the schools are not completely occupied, a certain number of the children of poor Europeans, of whom there are so many in India, might not be admitted.

WE notice that Messrs. Geo. W. Wheatley and Co., Shipping and East India Agents, of London and Liverpool, have, in conjunction with their agents, Messrs. Latham and Co., Bombay and Karachi, established, under the title of Eastern Express, a service for parcels which up to 60lb. weight are conveyed at 9d. per lb. from London, to any interior station in India—the service is by mail steamers and passenger trains, and while as speedy, will be considerably cheaper than other existing through services. Shippers are notified that to ensure this route being used, they should deliver to Wheatley and Co., and mark their goods "Eastern Express."

MEXICO is coming rapidly to the front in the commercial world, which she should have done long ago, considering her great advantages of situation and climate, and her extraordinary resources of mineral and other wealth. Many of these still remained undeveloped, but as all Mexican stocks are now in favour, the neglect which English capitalists have hitherto shown to this wonderful country is likely now to be speedily remedied. Amongst the latest and most promising enterprises offered to investors is "The Smelting Company of Mexico," which has been formed under a very strong directorate to purchase the "San Felipe" Smelting Works, situated in the city of Chihuahua, the capital of the State of that name in Mexico, for the purpose of carrying on the business known in the United States as "Customs Smelting," i.e., the purchase of ore from mine-owners at a large reduction of its actual assay value for subsequent treatment and reduction—a business which is known to be one exceptionally profitable. The present company appear to have secured the property in question on very favourable terms, and, according to the printed reports from experienced experts, which reports accompany the prospectus, the enterprise shows an estimated profit of not less than 40 per cent. on the total capital of £120,000, about one-fourth of which has already been applied for by the directors and their friends.

INDIAN INVESTMENTS.

THE time surely has come when the British investing public might turn their attention, with profit to themselves, to the great and remunerative field which India offers to them. Hitherto our Eastern Empire has had little attractions for the English capitalist, except so far as railways were concerned, and these were attractive only in consequence of a State guarantee. The Press in India, both Native and European, have for years past endeavoured to call to the notice of investors at home the many sound and valuable enterprises which have been started in India since it came under British rule, but the British investor has hitherto turned a deaf ear to the voice of the charmers, although they charmed wisely and well. He was prepared to risk his money in Utopian bonds or in companies formed for the purpose of sending refrigerators to the North Pole or fireirons to the Torrid Zone—or to sink it in bogus mines or spread it on irreclaimable wastes in out-of-the-way lands, but he declined to believe in the security which any Indian enterprise offered. And so many a promising enterprise in that country has continued to languish for the lack of British confidence and capital. We purpose to touch upon this matter in a short series of articles which shall only give plain figures and facts regarding certain of such enterprises, merely premising that no one connected with this journal has any interest direct or indirect in asking fair consideration of the same, except the desire to see India become more developed in wealth, and more strongly bound to Britain by ties of common and commercial interests. This is our only motive, and we declare it to be what Cæsar's wife ought to have been—above suspicion.

We have been led to the subject to-day by an article which appeared in last Thursday's Financial News, from which we cannot do better than quote the following:—

Were we asked which is the cheapest first-class security in the market we should, without hesitation, answer India Three per Cents. at 91. They rest on the same basis as Consols—the credit of the British Empire, and they pay about a third per cent. higher return. India just now is as solvent a country as the United Kingdom, and no danger can happen to it which will not equally affect the United Kingdom. Consols and India Three per Cents. are subject to precisely the same risks and possess the same advantages. There is no intrinsic reason why one should be a single point under the other, much less twelve points, as they are just now. They are both sterling loans, and the interest on both is payable at the Bank of England without any reference to fluctuations in silver or the depreciation of the rupee. Till the past two or three years, when all India stocks have been prejudiced by the silver scare, there was never much difference between them. In 1884 the highest price touched by Consols was 102½, and by India Threes 96½—a difference of only six points; their lowest prices in the same year were 99½ and 91½—a difference of eight points. In succeeding years the difference has gradually widened, without any valid reason whatever, except that everybody understands the value of Consols, while very few will take the trouble to understand India Three per Cents. The subjoined highest and lowest prices of the two for the past four years illustrates how variously the same stock may be appreciated when you call it by different names:—

	Consols.	India Threes.	Difference.
1884—Highest ...	102½	96½	6
Lowest ...	99½	91½	8½
1885—Highest ...	101½	92½	9½
Lowest ...	94½	84½	10
1886—Highest ...	102½	91½	10½
Lowest ...	99½	85½	13½
1887—Highest ...	103½	90½	12½
Lowest ...	100½	84½	15½

Believing, as most of us do, that India is an integral part of the British Empire, and that any national disaster which threatened Indian Securities would be equally bad for Consols, the above variations have no practical ground. When the resources of India and its relations to the Empire become better understood they will entirely disappear. India Three per Cents. have from this point of view a better right to stand at par than the three per cent. bonds of the Metropolitan Board of Works, and we may see them work up to it very steadily. At present they yield 3½ per cent. to the investor, or very little less than the bonds of third or fourth-rate colonies. Such an anomaly cannot live long in the light of investigation.

Since the above was written other journals have followed the lead of the Financial News, and the Indian Three per Cents. stand this morning at 92½, with an upward tendency. There is no reason why they should not go higher but the ignorance or the obstinacy of the British investor. He either knows nothing about the security offered, or he has made up his mind that a guarantee by the Government of India is a much weaker security than, say, for instance, a guarantee by the Government of Honduras. He has been known to express a fear that in case of trouble in India the Government there might repudiate its bonds, or withhold payment of the interest thereon! And, again, Russia might take India, and then where would his investment be? An Englishman who can thus discount the fortunes of his country—for the loss of India would involve the ruin of England—is hardly likely to be enticed away from the sweet simplicity of his Three per Cent. Consols. It will be difficult to persuade him that with the collapse of Indian Government Securities Consols are not likely to rise to an attractive figure. During the Indian Mutiny, it is true that Government rupee paper fell to a heavy discount, but this was chiefly owing to the panic-stricken action of Native holders. Only the most foolish of the Europeans sold their securities then, but there were many wise men who bought and reaped the harvest of a considerable profit for the confidence they had shown in the pluck and power of England. The situation is, however, far different to-day, when we hold India with a stronger but a kindlier grasp. There is little to fear from the foes within, notwithstanding the mutterings of discontent which a few agitators make public through the columns of the vernacular Press. The great chiefs and nobles of India are on our side, and we think that the large heart of the people is with us too. If there be foes without who intend to dispute our supremacy, let them come on. They shall not find us unprepared. If Englishmen would only believe in themselves, and understand that India to-day is an integral part of the British Empire, to be as jealously defended, and as unflinchingly held as our island home itself, we should have less of those cowardly carpings about the possibility of the loss of India. Let our capitalists and others take heart and plunge a little more into Indian investments, and they will find the result pleasant and profitable. Our contemporary, the Financial News, has rendered good service in drawing attention to the worth of Indian Securities, and we are glad to see that he has followed up his able article on the Indian Three per Cents. by another on Rupee Paper, which he shows to have attractions also worthy of the attention of the investor at home. But to this we shall recur in a future article.

THE ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.CHANCERY DIVISION.

This was a motion on behalf of the New Oriental Bank Corporation (Limited) to discharge an order made by Mr. Justice Chitty in chambers, sanctioning a conditional contract which had been entered into by the official liquidator of the Oriental Bank Corporation with the Assets Realisation Company for the sale to the latter company of the outstanding assets of the Oriental Bank Corporation for a sum sufficient to pay the creditors of the Oriental Bank Corporation remaining unsatisfied 19s. 9d. in the pound on their debts. The motion was made on the grounds that the judge had not at the time the order was made sufficient materials before him to enable him to say whether the conditional contract was one that ought to be sanctioned, and also that the New Oriental Bank Corporation were prepared to guarantee the creditors 20s. in the pound and to give up one half of any surplus there might be on realising the assets for the benefit of the shareholders. — Mr. Romer, Q.C., and Mr. F. B. Palmer appeared for the applicants; Mr. Latham, Q.C., and Mr. T. H. Wright for the official liquidator, and Mr. Maclean, Q.C., and Mr. Vernon Smith for the Assets Realisation Company. — Mr. Justice Chitty said the applicants had had ample time before the order was made to make a tender for the outstanding assets of the liquidating bank, but they abstained from doing so. He considered that he had properly exercised the discretion vested in him in sanctioning the conditional contract upon the facts then before him. Having properly sanctioned that contract, it would be inequitable to deprive the purchasers of the benefit of it because the applicants now came forward and said they were willing to give a better price. If he discharged the order, and released the Assets Realisation Company from their contract, it might be that after protracted negotiations the applicants might fail to come to terms with the official liquidator for the purchase of the assets, and no binding contract having been entered into by them the Court would be left without a purchaser for the property. He therefore refused the motion with costs.

The following remarks from an eminent legal authority referring to the decision of Mr. Justice Chitty regarding the sale of the remaining assets of the Oriental Bank appear in The Times :—

In the first place, those who object to the arrangement may, if they please, appeal against the decision of the learned judge. The creditors who objected were represented by a very able counsel, who failed to satisfy the judge that the adjournment into Court for which he asked was either necessary or expedient. Had these creditors offered a better figure they might themselves have obtained the assets, and, at all events, by that step they would have benefited the general body of creditors. In the absence, however, of any offer from them no valid ground appeared for entertaining a proposal tending only to delay a settlement without offering any security that the ultimate result would not be worse instead of better. It is the duty of the official liquidator to realise the assets without unnecessary delay and with the least expense possible. The affairs of the bank have already been in liquidation for upwards of four years. The arrangement now effected is a sale of the assets, and apparently because it is a sale on a large scale it is objected to. The creditors who opposed it, it is necessary to say, have had exceptionally good opportunities of gauging the value of the assets, and they profess to be able to assert that a greater sum should have been obtained; but although it has been in their power for some months past to make a counter offer they have not done so. In my belief no one who has knowledge of the facts will be able to confirm the suggestion made by those who opposed the arrangement that cash tenders for estates in Mauritius, for claims on similar estates, for shares in limited companies in that colony, and for other assets of a varied nature could have been invited without entailing a very serious sacrifice of value. For that and other cogent reasons the form of sale adopted was such as to favour buyers to the extent of enabling them with a minimum of risk to bid as near full value as any prudent purchaser would do. I may incidentally mention that the action of the Colonial Office two years ago in accepting on equitable grounds 19s. in the pound, payable by instalments, in satisfaction of Ceylon and Mauritius Government claims, full and immediate payment of which, with interest added, might have been legally enforced, gives the measure of what well-informed persons then considered to be the maximum dividend which could be hoped for. It is, nevertheless, true that the Crown reserved the right, which now comes into play, of receiving a greater dividend should such ever be realised, but practically no hope was at the time entertained of any benefit under this reservation. The learned judge considered the whole matter in all its bearings, and I may perhaps, without impertinence, say that in my experience no judge has devoted more anxious care and consideration than has the learned judge in this particular liquidation.

The following letter, signed "M. H. Hay," also appears in The Times :—

Sir,—I trust you will permit me, as a shareholder in the late Oriental Bank Corporation, to express not only the surprise with which the statement in The Times of to-day is received, but the indignation that is felt by the shareholders that their interests should be completely ignored. There is every reason to believe that if the liquidation is conducted with due regard to the interests of the shareholders as well as of the creditors the former may in time recover some portion of their loss. It is to be hoped, therefore, that no time will be lost in calling a meeting of the shareholders to protest and appeal against the decision said to have been come to.

Lieutenant-Colonel J. C. V. Rogers, retired list, late Royal Madras Fusiliers, has been appointed one of Her Majesty's Gentlemen-at-Arms, in the place of Colonel Walker, deceased. Colonel Rogers served in the Indian Mutiny Campaign of 1858. General J. H. Laye, C.B., has been selected for the Colonelcy of the Northumberland Fusiliers, vacant by the death of Lord Longford. He served with the 58th Regiment during the New Zealand War of 1845-47. Colonel Jones Vaughan, late 2nd East Yorkshire Regiment, has been appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Western District, from May 11, vice Colonel Barker, about to be promoted. He served in the Mutiny campaign of 1857-58, and subsequently in the Afghan campaign of 1878-80. Colonel A. H. Wavell (half-pay), late of the Welsh Regiment, has been appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General of the Dublin District. He served with the 41st Regiment in the Crimea. The command of the 1st Battalion Royal Irish Rifles, vacant by the retirement of Colonel F. Karslake, has been conferred upon Colonel C. J. Burnett, of the 2nd Battalion East Yorkshire Regiment. Colonel Burnett served in the Ashantee War of 1873, also in the Afghan War of 1879-80.

The command of the 7th Hussars, which becomes vacant next month by the retirement of Colonel F. M. Drew, will, it is understood, be obtained by Lieut.-Colonel A. Peel. Colonel Drew served with the Field Force employed against native tribes on the North-West Frontier of India in 1863, also in the 101st Fusiliers throughout the Indian North-West Frontier campaign of 1863. Colonel E. Markham, R.A., Director of Artillery Studies, succeeds Major-General Hay as Deputy Adjutant-General for Artillery at headquarters from the 2nd prox. Colonel Markham served in the Eastern campaign of 1854, receiving a medal with three clasps, Knight of the Legion of Honour, and Turkish medal. He also served in India in 1858. Colonel W. Luckhardt, C.B., Bombay Staff Corps, has been appointed A.D.C. to the Queen. He served in the Afghan war of 1878-80, also in the Egyptian war of 1882 as principal commissariat officer with the Indian Contingent. He was mentioned in despatches, was awarded the C.B., medal, and Khedive's star, and received also the Order of the 3rd Class of the Medjidie. Captain C. W. H. Evans, 1st Battalion Royal West Kent Regiment, has been selected for the Adjutancy of the 1st Volunteer Battalion. Captain Evans served with the 1st Battalion of the West Kent Regiment throughout the Egyptian war of 1882 also in the Nile expedition of 1884-85. Major E. P. Browne, 1st Battalion King's Liverpool Regiment, has accepted the Adjutancy of the 1st Lancashire Rifle Volunteers. He served in the Zulu war of 1879, receiving medal with clasp.

DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS. SAMPSON & CO.,

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS, originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and élite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing pearls and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substance defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This caution is necessary, as many persons have been purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been swindled. See The Times, July 12th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the most terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly powerful power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 394, Russell St., W.C.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA. We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE PALLIATIVE IN

NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBTLE IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is 1d., 2s., 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER, J. T. DAVENPORT, 394, Russell St., W.C.

TO THE HOLDERS OF INDIA £4 PER CENT. STOCK, & INDIA £4 PER CENT. STOCK CERTIFICATES.

INDIA OFFICE, 19th April, 1887.

The Secretary of State for India in Council hereby gives notice that, with reference to the India £4 per Cent. Stock and India £4 per Cent.
Stock Certificates becoming redeemable at par on or after the 10th October, 1888, as specified in the Advertisements under which the Stock and Stock Certificates have been issued, he is willing to grant a like amount of India £3 10s.
per Cent. Stock and India £3 10s. per Cent.
Stock Certificates respectively, in exchange for such India £4 per Cent. Stock and India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates.

The holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates, who avail themselves of this offer, will receive on the 6th July, 1887, a payment of £1 12s. 6d. per Cent. on the amount of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates surrendered, being a quarter's interest at £4 per Cent. per annum to that date, and ten shillings per Cent. per annum for a year and a quarter to October, 1888, paid in advance; and subsequently Interest will be due quarterly on the 5th October, 5th January, 5th April, and 5th July in each year, at the rate of £3 10s. per cent. per annum.

The Stock and Stock Certificates granted in exchange will be consolidated with the India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock now existing, which is not redeemable until the 5th January, 1931, but will be redeemable at par on or after that day, upon one year's previous notice having been given in The London Gazette by the Secretary of State for India in Council.

The Books of the Stock are kept at the Bank of England, where all Assignments and Transfers are made. All Transfers and Stock Certificates are free of Stamp Duty.

The same facilities are given in respect of this Stock for the transmission of dividend warrants by post, and for the exchange of Stock into Stock Certificates with coupons annexed payable to bearer, as are given in the case of Consols and India Four and Three per. Cent. Stocks. Trustees are empowered to invest Trust Funds in this Stock, unless expressly forbidden by the Instrument creating the Trust.

The holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock or Stock Certificates, who may desire to convert their Stock or Certificates upon the terms above-mentioned, are hereby required to signify their assent to the Secretary of State for India in Council, in a form to be obtained at the Chief Accountant's Office at the Bank of England; and such assents must be delivered at the Chief Accountant's Office at the Bank of England on or before Wednesday the 1st June, 1887. From the time of the delivery of such assents the holders of the India £4 per Cent. Stock thereby affected will be precluded from dealing with their respective shares of that Stock; but on the 8th June, or, in the case of assents sent in on or before the 26th May, or the 2nd June, their share of India £4 per Cent. having been cancelled corresponding amounts of India £3 10s. per Cent.
Stock will be inscribed in their names, and may from that date be dealt in. The assents of holders of India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates must be accompanied by the Stock Certificates therein referred to, for which a receipt will be given, that will be exchangeable for the new India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock Certificates after the expiration of seven days from the date of surrender.

In the case of Stock transferable at the Bank of Ireland, and of Certificates issued in respect thereof, the forms must be obtained from the Accountant-General's Office at the Bank of Ireland, and the assents must be delivered at that Office on or before the 1st June, 1887, as aforesaid.

A Bill will be introduced into Parliament to make Powers of Attorney and Requests for transmission of Dividend Warrants by post relating to India £4 per Cent. Stock surrendered as above, applicable to India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock.

It is the intention of the Secretary of State in Council that all holders of India £4 per Cent.
Stock or India £4 per Cent. Stock Certificates who do not, on or before Wednesday, the 1st June, 1887, signify in the manner above prescribed their assent to accept India £3 10s. per Cent.
Stock or India £3 10s. per Cent. Stock Certificates in lieu thereof, shall be paid off at par on the 10th October, 1888, due notice of the repayment being in that case given in October, 1887.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

This Company is formed to carry on the business known in the United States as "Custom Smelting," i.e., the purchase of ore from mine-owners at about 90 per cent. of its actual assay value, for subsequent treatment and reduction, the Smelters deducting a sufficient sum from the purchase price of the ores to pay the expenses of Smelting, and to leave a large margin for profit.

The Company intend to purchase the "San Felipe" Smelting Works, situate in the city of Chihuahua, the capital of the State of Chihuahua, Mexico.

These smelting works are within a short distance of the Chihuahua Station on the Mexican Central Railway—with which they can be connected at a small cost by a private line about a mile in length.

The importance of establishing a business of this class in Mexico, and the profits that may be expected to accrue from it, can readily be estimated from the fact that Mexican mine-owners now send their ores to the smelting works at Kansas City, St. Louis, Pueblo, or Denver—all of which places are situate in the United States at distances of over 1,000 miles from Chihuahua; the cost thus incurred for transport alone ranges from $15 (£3) to $30 (£6) per ton, to which must be added the Smelting Charges, varying according to the character of the ore from $12 (£2 10s.) to $30 (£6) per American ton of 2,000lbs. Consequently only very rich ores are sent to the United States; and in the absence of smelting facilities, such as this Company is established to provide, the less valuable ores met with in mining in much larger quantities have hitherto been neglected.

The works are in excellent condition, and ready for Smelting operations to be commenced immediately, and are capable of treating about 75 tons of ore per day; it is intended to erect additional Furnaces, which can be done in a few months, at a small expense, so as to bring up the total capacity to 150 tons per diem.

In the Reports by Messrs. Bainbridge, Seymour, and Rathbone, Consulting Engineers, of 2, Great George-street, Westminster, London, S.W., and Mr. A. Goldschmidt, the late Resident Manager at the Works, which accompany the Prospectus—it is shown that the estimated profit is over £50,000 per annum, based on a minimum of 100 tons of ore per day.

Mr. Thomas Sopwith, an experienced smelter, and managing director of "T. Sopwith and Co. (Limited)," whose well-known establishment (situate in Linares, Spain) is one of the largest smelting works in the world, has joined the board of this Company. It is proposed that the Company's affairs in Mexico shall be administered by Mr. A. J. Campbell (Messrs. Bowes, Scott, Read, Campbell, and Co.), who has for some years been personally engaged in smelting in Mexico. The early operations of this Company at Chihuahua will be superintended personally by Mr. E. P. Rathbone, and it is contemplated that one of the directors shall at intervals visit the works. It will thus be seen that the conduct of the Company's business will be in skilled and experienced hands.

Particular attention is drawn to the letters accompanying the Prospectus from Senor D. Miguel Salas, President of the "Mexican Bank" and Lessee of the National Mint at Chihuahua; from Messrs. Frazer and Chalmers of Chicago, whose agent, Mr. Reinhardt, has been resident over seven years in Chihuahua, and has a thorough knowledge of the business; from Messrs. Macmanus, Bankers of forty-five years' standing in Northern Mexico, who are intimately acquainted with the mining industries of the district; from Messrs. Harmon and Rollins, Ore Forwarding Agents of Chihuahua; Mr. C. H. Gosch, a prominent mine owner in the district; and Senor D. Santiago Wastall, Manager of the National Bank of Mexico at Chihuahua.

With the exception of £10,000, the Vendor agrees to take his interest wholly in fully paid-up shares of the Company.

Applications for Shares must be forwarded, together with the deposit of two shillings per Share, to the Bankers of the Company, Messrs. Ransom, Bouverie, and Co., or the London Bank of Mexico and South America (Limited), or to the Secretary, at either the temporary offices of the Company.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application may be obtained from the Bankers, or at either the temporary offices of the Company, or from the Brokers or the Solicitors of the Company.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 13th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 11th May; and from Calcutta to the 10th May.

OFFICIAL intelligence from Afghanistan states that there is little or no trustworthy information regarding the Ghilzai rising.

FROM private sources, however, it is learnt that serious fighting of two days' duration has occurred at Shazadgi between Omrakhan of Jundul and Mahomed Sharif of Duri.

THE former was defeated and lost 700 men and 160 firearms.

A SEVERE engagement has taken place between the Ameer's troops and the Shinwarris.

THE Ameer has been suffering from gout, but is now convalescent.

IN connection with the security of the North-West Frontier, the erection of a fortified serai at Lundi Kotal has been proposed to Government.

THE Sewlall Motilall Mill, Bombay, has been destroyed by fire. The building was uninsured, and the damage is estimated at over four lakhs of rupees.

MR. HALLEN, the Superintendent of Horse-breeding Operations in India, in the course of a lecture delivered on that subject in India, expressed his belief that the efforts made by Government to improve the breed of horses in India was now beginning to show itself.

ENCOUNTERS with bands of dacoits are still reported from Burma; but the country is nevertheless gradually quieting down.

THE treasure which is being lent by the Gwalior Durbar to the Government of India was found to have been buried in wells and pits in the women's quarter of the palace.

THE final arrangement for the conveyance of pilgrims by Messrs. Cook and Son from India to Jeddah have been completed. The arrangement has been sanctioned by the Government for three years, and they guarantee the firm against the actual loss up to for the first year £2,000, and for the succeeding two years £1,000 annually.

KADUR BUX, the chief of the Joonaghur outlaws, has been sentenced to death by Colonel Grant, the Sessions Judge of Kurrachee, for the murder of a policeman.

A YOUNG widow belonging to the Bhatti community has been remarried in Bombay. The ceremony, which was sanctioned by the parents and grandparents of the child, was witnessed by a large gathering of influential people.

MR. CAREY, accompanied by Mr. Dalgleish, the well-known Yarkand traveller, has arrived at Srinagar, having made a very rapid journey from Ladakh.

DAFFADAR KHAN, Agent of the Chitral Chief, is now in Simla on his annual visit to the Government of India. All seems quiet in the petty States between Kafistan and Cashmere.

THE Women's Jubilee offering in Rangoon and Maublin amounts to Rs. 4,102.

THE Simla Bank Corporation, in liquidation, proposes shortly to pay the first dividend to depositors of $6\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. on deposits.

activity at Chahajui, where the Russians are collecting supplies as if preparing for a move southwards into Kham-i-Ab.

THE Governor of Kandahar, in obedience to orders from the Amir, is busily enlisting Durani recruits with a view to sending a large force against the Hotaks.

COLONEL GATACRE, the Deputy Quartermaster-General, is shortly to march along the frontier for the purpose of inspecting all the stations occupied by the Punjab Frontier Force. Colonel Gatacre is also to report upon the crossings of the Indus in connection with the Sind-Sagar Railway.

THE Engineer-in-Chief of the Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway has inspected the line so far as it has been completed and reported satisfactorily. Considering the difficulty experienced in obtaining labour on some of the sections the report is an agreeable surprise.

A RUMOUR is current that it has been practically decided to change the gauge of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway, and that Colonel Bissett is to visit England immediately to make the necessary arrangements.

IT is said that the Bilaspur-Etawah State Railway will shortly be extended from Umaria to Sohagpur.

THE Engineer-in-Chief of the Bengal-Nagpore Railway has arrived in India with a strong staff of engineers.

BRIGADIER-GENERAL BROWNE, R.E., having practically seen the completion of the Sind-Pishin Railway, now reverts to the military works branch on being granted furlough. Mr. O'Callaghan will take the place of General Browne until the "finishing touches" have been given to the work.

MAJOR BARR, Political Agent in Rewah, acts for Colonel Bannerman at Gwalior when the latter takes up the Central Indian Agency.

COLONEL PLANT, Commissioner of Tenasserim, had an apoplectic fit when riding at Moulmein, falling from his horse and fracturing his skull. He was insensible when the steamer left Moulmein, and was not expected to live.

MR. WALLACE, District Superintendent of Police at Meerut, had a fall while pigsticking in the Ganges Kader. He was brought into Meerut in a state of insensibility, and died on Monday night, May 9.

THE Alliance Bank of Simla proposes, it is understood, to open a branch in London, which would probably be managed by Mr. James Walker, the manager of the head office at Simla.

NAWAB BUSHIR-UD-DOWLA, at present in Europe, has been selected by the Nizam to succeed Sir Salar Jung as Prime Minister of Hyderabad. The Government of India have sanctioned the selection.

COLONEL A. CROOKSHANK proceeds shortly to Mian Mir to raise the new battalion of Muzbi-Pioneers. Major T. Deane will be promoted in the Military Department Secretariat to the place of Colonel Crookshank, while Colonel Toker, of the 18th Bengal Infantry, will be appointed junior Deputy Secretary.

COLONEL C. H. LUARD, Consulting Engineer for Guaranteed Railways, is proceeding on six months' leave. Major Cook, Deputy Consulting Engineer, Madras, officiates for him.

COLONEL POLE CAREW, Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief, leaves by this week's mail for England on four months' leave. Major Ian Hamilton officiates for him.

IT is stated that the three-and-a-half crores in silver coin, which the Gwalior durbar is lending to the Government of India as part of the annual Public Works Loan, will be minted at Calcutta during the next three months.

MR. JOHN BEAMES, of the Bengal Board of Revenue, has tendered his explanation of certain charges brought against him by a portion of the Native Press, and Government is said to be perfectly satisfied.

THE Finance Committee's recommendations regarding the passage and outfit allowances granted to certain high officers, if resident in England at the time of their appointment, will probably result in a reduction of the allowances of the Governors of Madras and Bombay and of the Bishops of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay.

ACCORDING to official notification the Queen's birthday was to be kept in India on May 24, the Viceroy holding a Levée and giving a State dinner at Simla on that date, and a State Ball on May 26.

Notes of the Week.

THE latest telegrams from India are dated Calcutta, May 29, and Bombay, May 30. Both contain all sorts of rumours from Afghanistan, but both allow that such rumours are of doubtful authenticity. All reports from Native sources must be distrusted. That the Russians are intriguing in Badakshan and Chitral is hardly news, but the statement that they are about to move against the former is merely bazaar "gossip." To the same source must also be attributed the report that there has been a treasonable correspondence between the Ameer's officers in Badakshan and the Russians, and that negotiations have been opened between the Ameer's generals and the insurgent Ghilzai leaders. All these tales are possible enough, but they must be accepted with considerable credulity. Again, the latest intelligence received at Bombay states that the Ameer's troops defeated the Ghilzais at Ghuzni on the 20th inst., both sides losing heavily. But news from Candahar up to the 24th inst., which had also reached Bombay, makes no mention of this conflict and defeat.

THE most serious news is that which tells of the cyclone which passed over the northern portion of the Bay of Bengal last week. Fortunately it did not visit Calcutta with the severity the two cyclones which, in the memory of many Anglo-Indians now living, caused such disaster in that city and amongst the shipping in the Hooghly, besides wrecking several vessels in the Bay. The storm wave did not, as then, pass over Saugor Island, sweeping away thousands of lives in its course; but the gale appears to have raged with considerable fury, and there is reason to believe that a great loss of life has occurred at sea. More than one vessel is reported to have foundered, and a coasting steamer, with upwards of 700 Native pilgrims, who were proceeding to Juggernath for the Hindoo festival, held there at this season of the year, is reported missing.

OTHERWISE the latest news from all parts of India is quiet and satisfactory. The Bengal Chamber of Commerce has held its annual meeting, and its president and members have discussed, as usual, various political and fiscal questions. The Times correspondent telegraphs that allusion was made to the administration of justice, and the necessity was dwelt upon of spending the revenue derived from suitors on improving and strengthening the Courts. This is vague enough in all conscience, but it is satisfactory to know that the measures taken by Government to investigate the silk-worm disease is likely to revive the declining silk industry of Bengal; and Mr. Henniker Heaton's agitation for a reduction of the overland postage rate has been taken up in India, and is receiving support from the various Chambers of Commerce there. The news that the National Bank of India has opened a branch at Mandalay shows that the pacification of Upper Burma is pretty complete, and that an impetus will soon be given there to trade, alike profitable and safe.

AND not the least satisfactory portion of the news is to the effect that several of the Native Princes and Chiefs of India will be present in England to take part in Her Majesty's Jubilee. The Guicowar of Baroda leaves Bombay for that purpose to-day, and others will follow. This is a move in the right direction. The more that we encourage the chiefs and nobles of India to visit England the more fixed will be the stability of our rule in the East. Jubilee addresses are all very well, and subscriptions for the Imperial Institute (to which the Gwalior Regency has just given 120,000 rupees) are no doubt equally acceptable, but the presence of the Native nobility will be still more welcome. Their coming here is a conquest over great and old prejudices, and argues well for the good influence which the British political residents are exercising. Their return to their own country will mean the carrying back with them of enlarged views, and more enlightened ones of the power and capacity of England. The result can hardly be other than the strengthening of the bonds of loyalty which bind the feudatory chiefs and their peoples to the mild and beneficent rule of the Paramount Power.

PREJUDICE is, of course, still very powerful in India against forcing Western upon Eastern ideas of manners, travel, and life, and some Natives of the old school complained, at a meeting held at Poona the other day to discuss the system of education imparted to the Chiefs and Sirdars at the Rajkumar College, that the educated Princes and Chiefs of India were given to apeing European customs and manners and giving up the religion of their forefathers, which is no doubt to a great extent true. But it is gratifying to find a vernacular paper defending the new order of things in this wise:—"There is this to say for it, that it withdraws the Princes from the debasing influences of a Native Court at an early age, and accustoms them to a better life than they are wont to see. Those who have been educated there have turned out enlightened rulers, and if there have been shortcomings in them we must ascribe them, not to the education they have received, but to the transition period through which the whole of 'New India' is just now passing. Subjected to new influences and new ideas the Princes and people of India are bound to change with the old order, and it is vain to arrest the progress of enlightenment and of the new aspirations it brings with it."

SENTIMENTS such as these are the best testimonies to the good which English rule is doing for India. If we continue to win men's minds there in this manner we are establishing a power on our side stronger than any represented by armed men and cannon. It is the gaining of one of those victories of peace more renowned than any of war, because the results will continue to progress for good as the years roll onwards.

INDEED, in many directions there are signs of such results. The vernacular Press of India, especially that of Bengal, has been often and justly condemned for its seditious tone, and for its hostility to English rule and its misrepresentations of English motives, but caste and race prejudices are rapidly breaking down even in Bengal. Even the Bengalee now condemns the system of infant marriages. Ten years ago it would hardly have dared to write as it writes in the number before us to-day:—

We say nothing of the deplorable physical consequences which follow in the train of early marriage, the utter prostration of physical energy and national vitality which is inevitable. And are not some of the great moral qualities dependent upon the possession of physical strength and energy? If national regeneration in the highest sense of the expression is an object of national concern then we say the sooner public opinion is prepared and matured against the custom of child-marriage, the better it is for our people.

ULTRA-RADICALS at home, and those who are never tired of denouncing British rule in India, might do worse than study Native opinion as it is now being expressed in many of the Native newspapers. We are glad to notice that the leading English journals in India are devoting more of their space to reproducing the views of their vernacular contemporaries, and there has certainly been a marked improvement of late in the tone of the leading Native journals of Bengal and Bombay. Madras has always been the most loyal of the Presidencies in this respect.

It was hardly to be expected that the representative organ of the orthodox Hindoos would approve of Rukmabai's action in declining to ratify her marriage, but the Hindoo Patriot pleads for a gentle punishment only for her conduct—instead of the imprisonment threatened by the Bombay High Court:—

We still adhere to the opinion that our law looks upon the use of force on woman with the greatest abhorrence. We may add, in perfect sincerity, that had it not done so we would have denounced it. So particular is the Hindu law on the subject that it makes exceptions of female offenders in regard to severe or degrading punishments. For instance, for some heinous offences the law ordains shaving of the head and deportation; but for a woman guilty of the offence, says Parasara, the shaving should be emblematical, and the cropping of three inches of the ends of the tresses should be accepted as equivalent to shaving. We like much this decorum and sense of propriety.

Perhaps Rukmabai, however, like some English ladies, would prefer imprisonment to the cropping of even one inch of a tress. But the hint that she should be gently dealt with is another sign that the old order of things is changing.

THE Times of India says:—"Bombay joins with Madras in offering cordial congratulations to his Excellency the Governor of the Southern Presidency on his elevation to the peerage. Mr. Bourke, or Lord Connemara, as he is henceforth to be known, has, during his brief tenure of office, won golden opinions from all races and classes in the province whose destinies he guides, his popularity being naturally enhanced by the contrast his methods of Government and habits of social life offer to those of his immediate predecessor in office.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, MAY 29.

A cyclone of unusual severity passed over the northern portion of the Bay of Bengal last week. At the beginning of the week the meteorological department reported that a storm had formed near Diamond Island, and was slowly advancing towards the Madras coast. At first the storm appeared likely to strike land near Vizagapatam, but on Wednesday morning it took a more northerly direction, and during the following night passed between Saugor Island and False Point, and thence inland, via Midnapore and Chota Nagpore. At Saugor Island the wind's rate was 67 miles an hour, when the anemometer and storm signals were blown away. It is believed that the wind attained greater force later. The strength of the gale rendered it impossible to hoist storm signals at Diamond Harbour. Telegraphic communication with Balasore is interrupted, and it is feared that much damage has been done there. Sixty-two houses were blown down at Chandbally, and from 15 to 20 boats were destroyed, but no lives were lost. There is, however, only too much reason to believe that great loss of life was caused at sea. Much anxiety was felt regarding the ship Godiva, which left the river for Liverpool on Wednesday morning in tow of the steam-tug Retriever, but it is now reported the Godiva is ashore, and that all hands are safe. Nothing has been heard of the Retriever, and as one of her Lascars was picked up by the incoming P. and O. Company's steamer Nepaul, it seems likely that she foundered. Three coasting steamers left Calcutta on Wednesday morning for Chandbally, with a large number of pilgrims, who were proceeding to Juggernath for the Hindoo festival, which is to be celebrated there this week. Two of them, the Curlew and the Tyrone, stopped at Kedgerie, and are safe; but the third, the Sir John Lawrence, belonging to Messrs. Macneil and Company of Calcutta, proceeded on her voyage with 730 Native passengers. She was seen on Wednesday afternoon standing down the western channel, but has not been heard of since then. Four steamers have been sent to look for her, and as she was a good sea-boat and was commanded by a skilful sailor, there are some hopes that she may have escaped. But those hopes are very faint, and the chances are that she has been lost, with all on board. The pilot of the Nepaul reports having passed a quantity of wreckage, and the two lightships at the mouth of the Hooghly were missing from their stations. Probably further news of losses by sea and land will come in during the next few days.

At the annual meeting of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce on Wednesday the president, Mr. Turner, delivered a long address on several topics of great interest to the mercantile and general community. He commenced by alluding to the administration of justice, and dwelt upon the necessity for spending the revenue derived from suitors on the improving and strengthening of the courts. He expressed a hope that provision would be made in the new Bankruptcy Bill for the following of defaulting debtors into the Native States. He thought that steps should be taken at once to replace the present floating bridge over the Hooghly at Calcutta by a permanent structure. The measures taken by the Government to investigate the silkworm disease would, he hoped, revive the declining silk industry. He stated that the question of establishing a uniform standard of length for all India had been pressed upon the Government by the Bengal, Bombay, Madras, Rangoon, and Kurrachee Chambers of Commerce, and hoped that their united representations would receive early attention. The reduction of the overland postage rate was, he said, another matter of urgency, it being anomalous that a letter from India to England should cost half as much again as one to the Continent of Europe.

He then proceeded to comment upon the financial policy of the Government, and gave it as his opinion that it would be a great advantage to the Government and the public if that policy were discussed annually in the Legislative Council on the introduction of the Budget. It was now, he thought, clearly proved that the abolition of the cotton import duties and the reduction of the salt tax were mistakes. Had the Government been able to spare revenue, the reduction of the rice export duty should have taken precedence of those two measures. He did not consider it necessary to dilate on the question of exchange, as it was occupying the attention of a Royal Commission at home. He concluded his speech with a few words of congratulation to the Queen on her Jubilee.

The President's address was followed by a discussion, in which several members took part. Mr. Petrie criticized with some severity the report on the wheat trade lately published by Mr. Smeaton, Director of Agriculture in the North-Western Provinces. Mr. Smeaton had stated that the European shippers in Calcutta and Bombay obtained an unfair advantage over the growers by arbitrarily fixing the standard of refraction—that is, the deduction for impurities—at 5 per cent., whereas the actual amount of impurities was only 2 or 3 per cent. Mr. Petrie challenged Mr. Smeaton to prove this statement, and asserted that in fact the average amount of impurities in wheat on its arrival in Calcutta was from 6 to 7 per cent. The Hon. Robert Steel made some interesting remarks, in the course of which he severely condemned the rice export duty and referred to Sir E. Baring's "mistakes" in remitting taxation in 1882.

A shocking tragedy occurred at Kurrachee on the 20th inst. A sepoy of the 26th Native Infantry having got possession of 40 rounds of ammunition ran amuck through the lines at one o'clock in the morning. He first shot two Sepoys, who were asleep in the barrack verandah. The alarm was sounded and the regiment turned out, but nothing could be done till daylight, when detachments were sent in various directions to search for him. Meanwhile the murderer proceeded to the soldiers' bazaar and shot four shopkeepers who were sleeping outside their houses. He then went to the plain behind the infantry lines and shot five cartmen. When he found that the regiment had turned out he took refuge in a stone enclosure, whence he fired many rounds. The colonel called for volunteers to rush upon him, and two Sepoys responded. When they got within six yards of him he shot himself through the heart. The eleven men whom he had shot were killed on the spot, or died in a few hours.

The Guicowar will leave India next Tuesday, and will arrive in England just in time for the Jubilee.

The Indian Government is transmitting a large number of Jubilee addresses, and of Indian subscriptions for the Imperial Institute (the amount of which is believed to be between two and three lakhs of rupees). Sir Gunput Rao, on behalf of the Gwalior Council of Regency, has presented 120,000 rupees.

A Bill is about to be introduced in the Legislative Council to remove all doubts as to the legality of the rules issued by several of the cantonment and municipal authorities prohibiting the killing of game at certain seasons. The Government will have power to extend the measure to such localities as it may choose.

AFGHANISTAN.

CALCUTTA, MAY 29.

Very little news was received last week from Afghanistan. It is generally believed that the junction between Generals Gholam Hyder Orakzai and Sikandar Khan, in Maruf, has greatly improved the Ameer's chance of success, as the Ghilzais will now have to meet a much stronger force than had previously been brought against them. It is reported that the Hotaks have drawn off to the hills, and are seeking to excite the neighbouring tribes, but that the attempt has not yet been successful. News has arrived from Cabul that the Ameer's health was improving, but that he had not held durbars for some days. He is said to have announced his intention to take the field in person if his Generals do not quell the rebellion soon, but he is not likely to leave Cabul in the present state of affairs.

Many rumours of doubtful authenticity, emanating from Native sources, are current to the effect that the Russians are preparing to move on Badakshan, and are intriguing in that province and in Chitral.

Reports are current at Quetta of negotiations between the Ameer's Generals and the insurgent Ghilzai leaders, but these reports are not believed. The Ameer has issued a proclamation declaring the cause of the revolt to be the illegal diversion by the chiefs of taxes which should go to the State.

It is stated that careful calculations are being made of the carrying capacity of the Scinde-Pishin and Bolan railways in connection with a mobilization scheme for placing an army corps on the frontier, and that special military time-tables are being prepared.

NEPAUL.

CALCUTTA, MAY 29.

General Ram Shamshere, who was appointed Commander-in-Chief on the expulsion of General Khudga Shamshere last March, died last Sunday, after a short illness. The vacant office goes to his next brother, General Deo Shamshere.

BURMA.

RANGOON, MAY 29.

Lieutenant Tinley, of the 1st Bombay Lancers, and Lieutenant Pain, of the mounted infantry, with a small mounted force, this morning surprised a body of dacoits near Thayetpin, twelve miles to the south-west of Meiktila. Myokegydeo and two other well-known dacoit leaders and 30 dacoits were killed. This affair completely clears out the dacoit leaders from the Meiktila district, which formerly was one of the most disturbed in Upper Burma.

The National Bank of India is opening a branch in Mandalay. This will greatly assist the revival of trade in Upper Burma, where the want of banking facilities has been much felt. It is believed that the judicious enterprise of the National Bank will be repaid by a large and valuable accession of business.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

PROFESSORS AS SPECIALISTS.

(Indian Daily News.)

A wonderful discovery seems to have been made in the Educational Department, leading to a resolution on the system of making a single professor teach several subjects, and of transferring an officer appointed for a special purpose to work of an entirely different nature. The Government recommends the appointment of specialists as professors at a fixed rate of pay. One wonders why the Education Department should be thus specially singled out, and how it is that this wonderful discovery has only just been made of men trained for one thing being appointed to something else. And the wonder is equally great why this discovery has never been made as regards the Civil Service. A member of that body is capable of teaching or doing work of an "entirely different nature" without any detriment to the public service. He may be a collector one day and the next fully qualified to be the head of a jail or of the police. After that he may be a Commissioner in a district or a Resident at a Native court. He might ably discharge the duties of Opium Agent, or be put in charge of the finances to cook the next budget, and then, with his accumulated experience, be "put to work of an entirely different nature," by being placed in charge of the public works and to align railways or canals. It is never supposed for a moment that special knowledge is required in any department where a C.S. officer is concerned. He can be a collector of customs, or a director of statistics, or take nominal charge of the agriculture of the country. Nothing comes amiss to him if the "screw" is only on the "Whitworth pitch" and right-handed. Why should not this be the case in the Educational Department as well as in the other? Why should not a man who is engaged to teach history or literature be as able to teach history or literature as a Civil servant to be a Postmaster and Controller-General of Accounts, or an agricultural secretary and a Commissioner of Police? Is not the absurdity greater that assumes the competency of one man to discharge any number of incompatible duties than that which assumes an educated man to be capable of teaching only one subject? We do not wish it to be implied that an educated man is capable of teaching equally well any subject; but the resolution as regards specialist professors in the Educational Department seems very inconsistent with the practice of the Government in its dealings with the Civil Service. It seems to us that the rules in both cases should be somewhat in the same direction; and men be placed in offices only for which they are fit and the duties of which they are competent to fulfil. So long as the present system is continued, so long shall we have doubly costly railways, neglected districts in consequence, and muddled budgets that pass comprehension.

INDIA WITHOUT DOCKS.

(Asian.)

Lord Brassey has done good service in calling attention to the want of proper docks in India for the repair of large ships of war. It is undoubtedly a very serious matter that H.M.'s men-of-war on the East Indian Station must go all the way to Malta if they require to be docked. There were probably some people who have heard about a floating dock at Bombay, which ought to have been at the service of the ships of H.M.'s Navy. But Bombay, in spite of all its merits, is a city not free from illusions. It turns out that its floating-dock is an illusion or an actual delusion. Mr. Russell Aitken, M.I.C.E., formerly member of the Harbour and Pilotage Board of Bombay, has written a letter to the Times in which he speaks of the Bombay floating-dock as "a white elephant," and "a dismal failure." Perhaps the good people of Bombay may not be pleased to hear that such things are said; but they must remember that the words are those of one of their own citizens. It would be as imprudent for an outsider to say anything disrespectful of the Bombay floating-dock as it is dangerous for anyone who does not belong to Madras to write or speak irreverently of the Madras Harbour Works. But Mr. Aitken has given an interesting and instructive explanation, which may be as balm to the feelings of Duckland, because he shows that the Bombay Harbour and Pilotage Board were not responsible for the floating-dock; and he seems to hold that the Bombay Government is also free from blame in the matter. He says that in 1869 the Harbour Board were suddenly startled by the announcement that a contract had been entered into to erect a hydraulic-lift graving-dock. The Board promptly represented to the Superintendent of Marine that such a dock would not work in the tide-way of Bombay Harbour, but the Superintendent of Marine said that he had not been consulted about the new dock, and apparently no one in authority at Bombay had been consulted about it. The dock, which cost £250,000 sterling, was built and handed over by the contractor to Government, and the first experiment with it was made on a French man-of-war, which was seriously injured in the attempt to get it on the dock. Since that date no use has been made of the dock, though it used to be one of the show sights of Bombay for strangers to admire. Mr. Aitken has offered a suggestion how the dock might be made efficient and useful in connection with a scheme of wet-docks, but until that or some similar scheme is adopted, India is unprovided with the docks that it much needs.

SIR SALAR JUNG.

(Bombay Gazette.)

So far the best feeling prevails on all sides, and it is satisfactory that it is so, for it would not conduce to the best interests of Hyderabad that heartburnings and resentments should complicate local politics. We are informed that we were in error in stating that Sir Salar Jung when coming to Bombay was met by a telegram at a station out of Hyderabad informing him that he was wanted in the Palace. It appears, however, that his Highness found means to give expression to his annoyance at finding that the Minister had left the city in accordance with the leave of absence which had been granted to him without having personally taken leave of his Sovereign and presented a nazar, as is the custom in Hyderabad. The Minister pleaded his ill-health and the necessity of proceeding to Bombay in time to overtake the steamer in which his passage was taken, and that the omission of the usual etiquette was affirmed to his illness, and not to any disregard of his duty to his Highness. There is no doubt that the Nizam was very wroth at the time over this incident, which however we are assured had nothing to do with the resignation of the Minister. The friends of the latter are of opinion that as matters stood it was best to terminate for a time at all events relations which were no longer cordial or sympathetic. The Minister is young, which is a fault that will mend; he can afford to wait and see what the future may bring forth. The difficulties he has met with during his two years of office must have tended to form his character and mature his judgment. Going abroad for a time, unpreoccupied by State affairs, he will acquire an experience of the world which may be of value hereafter. It is said by those who know both well that in spite of differences and misunderstandings the Minister loves the Nizam, and is devoted to his interests which were the care of his father, while his Highness has still a liking for the ex-Minister at the bottom of his heart. Now that his Highness has proved that the Sovereign is stronger than the Minister, whatever resentment may have been felt will probably soften down. Sir Salar Jung's absence will give time for recent and superficial differences to be forgotten, and the memories of early friendship may revive. Youth was the fault attributable to both, and time and experience will, it may be hoped, be equally serviceable to the Nizam and to the Minister who has now placed his resignation in his hands.

INDIAN SILK.

(Pioneer.)

The decline in the silk industry must be due either to causes which are natural and unavoidable, or to those which are technical and preventable. It might be that from climate or other causes it was impossible to produce silk in Bengal structurally as fine as that of other countries, and that as a consequence Indian silk had been driven from the world's markets. This has generally been assumed to be the case of late years, and we have accordingly been told that any industry which India can hope to establish must be in wild silks, such as the tussar of Northern India, the eri of Cachar, or the muga of the Upper Assam Valley. We had occasion last year to state that the opinion of such an eminent expert as Mr. Wardle, of Leek, was against this assumption, and it is at least satisfactory to learn that it has received no support in the course of the recent investigations. Mr. Wardle said that the fibre of Indian silk was as good as, even in some respects preferable to that of, Italian, and this seems to be the belief even among those manufacturers who have seen the industry steadily decreasing for the last ten years. For example, Mr. Lyall, the Manager of the Gaunatea Silk Company, thinks Bengal can "make silk almost as good as the cocoons of Italy produce," and that it affords "the finest field in the world." But while there is a general agreement that the decline is not due to the structural inferiority of the Indian silk fibre, there is a considerable diversity of opinion regarding the true causes and the precise degree in which each has contributed to the ultimate effect. Mr. Wardle is alone in ascribing a considerable proportion of the evil to want of proper methods of reeling in the Bengal filatures. Practical men assert, on the contrary, that the silk made by the ordinary reeling process is as good as that made by the machinery recommended by Mr. Wardle. The question is one which can be properly decided only by experts, but from the discussion at the meeting presided over by Sir Edward Buck, there seems little doubt that while at the present process of manufacture may as a rule be the best suited for Bengal, still in carrying it out has fallen off. One gentleman, for example, stated that "Native workmen can make common silk, but they do not now make medium silk such as they used to make under the supervision of gentlemen taking an interest in the industry," and the Officiating Collector of Rajshahye says the wages of the reelers are so wretchedly small that they cannot be expected to do their work either with interest or intelligence. While, therefore, it may be inexpedient for Government to attempt supervision of the manufacture, it seems probable that the degeneration of the reeler has had at least something to do with the decay of the industry as a whole.

Another cause to which Mr. Wardle was inclined to attribute the decline in the silk industry was the practice of levying differential rates of rent, which had, he thought, led to a contraction of the area under mulberry and a tendency to deny the silk-worms sufficient nourishment. As a matter of fact, the investigations of Mr. Finucane show that the area under mulberry cultivation has undergone an enormous contraction in recent years, and that the practice of renting according to crops, and not according to the value of the land, is in vogue in several of the cocoon-rearing districts of Bengal. In these districts the tendency is to charge a higher rent when a ryot puts his land under mulberry and to allow an abatement when the mulberry is given up. Even on the Chanchal estate in Maldah, which is under the Court of Wards, it has been customary to levy a salamee equal to one year's rent when the land is first planted with mulberry. As Mr. Finucane points out, this practice was condemned by the Court of Directors in 1837, and by subsequent rules issued by the Board of Revenue. While, however, the practise is one which should be steadily discountenanced by Government officials, and while it has no doubt had something to do with the limitation of the mulberry fields, the general opinion seems to be that it is not the chief, or even an important, cause.

Undoubtedly the chief value of the investigation has been to show the extent of ravages made by disease among the cocoons, and the utter impossibility of its extermination if the rearers are not educated out of their present methods and habits. The report of Mr. Wood-Mason and Babu Nitya Gopal Mukarji leaves no doubt whatever on the point. It seems that four distinct diseases among the silk-worms are recognised by the Natives. The most deadly of these is pébrine, which devastated the rearing houses of France and Italy until it was driven out by the system introduced by Pasteur. It is not only contagious, but hereditary, passing from mother to offspring through the egg, and it accordingly devastates the cleanly and most carefully conducted nurseries no less than the dirty and the ill-conducted. "The other diseases, on the other hand, are primarily caused by the vicious and filthy system of rearing in vogue amongst the Natives, and only secondarily by the germs that associated with them; and neither of them appears to be hereditary in the strict sense, though all are communicable from one worm to another, either directly or indirectly, and are contractible from the germs which must necessarily exist in inconceivable numbers in houses—and in everything that those houses contain—where worms are reared year after year on the same trays, and the excreta of the living and the corpses of the dead worms, with the débris of past meals, are all allowed to accumulate until they form what can only be described as a dunghheap equal in thickness to the depth of the tray." Babu Mukarji tells of one nursery he visited where the atmosphere indoors was made up of the about 2,500 worms, the man with his wife and children and a cow. This astounding aggregation of animal life was collected within accumulated breath of 32 trays of worms, each tray containing in a space of eleven by five cubits. This is a bad case, but even ordinarily it is necessarily thought that one or two men should sleep inside the nursery to protect the worms from supernatural influences. The present methods of selection and rearing, in short, may be described as methods for the survival of the unfittest through the propagation and perpetuation of disease. It is absurd to expect the silk industry in Bengal to flourish under such conditions in face of the scientific selection and the careful rearing prevalent in France and Italy. Babu Mukarji has already done a good deal to persuade the rearers to introduce fresh air, cleanliness and plenty of space, and good may be expected to result; but he was unable to guarantee that all the cocoons he selected were free from taint of pébrine, and accordingly both he and Mr. Wood-Mason recommended the institution of an egg-producing establishment conducted on the Pasteur system, that is, where microscopic examination ensures healthy seed. This would necessitate the engagement of a French expert, and we are glad to see that at the meeting at the Indian Museum it was resolved to enter into negotiations for this purpose with M. Rondot of Lyons, the Imperial and Local Governments to share the expense with local manufacturers.

These steps have not been taken a moment too soon. Babu Mukarji informs us that half the number of rearers in Bengal have given up their trade, otherwise the most profitable of all in the country, after a series of failures for the last two years, simply on account of the diseases; and that a fourth part of the mulberry lands in the silk-growing villages of Moorshedabad have been converted into sugarcane or even rice-fields. A like tale is told by the returns of India's foreign trade for the eleven months ending last February. There we find the value of the raw silk imported into India from China and other countries amounted to 73 lakhs more than the total value of the exports of raw silk, waste, cocoons, and manufactures together; while the value of manufactured articles imported reached the extremely high figure of 105 lakhs. There is no reason to suppose that were the proper conditions of culture and manufacture observed, Bengal silk would not occupy a large part of the market now monopolised by that of other countries. Indeed, even with these conditions, so unsatisfactory as they are at present, the demand for Bengal silk has been rising in Europe, the price being now Rs. 20 a seer instead of Rs. 7 or Rs. 8. If the movement now set on foot be carried on with care, patience and perseverance, it does not seem past hoping that in a few years this demand may swell rather than slacken, and the silk industry in Bengal again attain something of the dimensions and prosperity of former days.

CONSUMPTION OF COAL.

(Pioneer.)

The possibility of increasing the consumption of coal in India by reducing the cost of carriage and thus bringing it into competition with other fuel on favourable terms, is a subject which has frequently been brought forward, and is now again coming into notice. A recent writer in a Calcutta engineering journal in reviving this discussion gives the value of coal for heating purposes as compared with wood fuel at about four to one, and it may be accepted that the price of either at any station from 300 to 400 miles from a colliery, is about equal on this basis, viz., that a hundred maunds of firewood can be bought for the price of one ton of such coal as would be used for domestic purposes. It seems, however, that before we agitate for cheaper coal for use by Natives, we should, ourselves, show the way by using it in our kitchens; and there is in fact no sort of reason, save the essential conservatism of the Anglo-Indian, why this should not be done. Cooking stoves can be bought cheaply enough, and the saving in the fuel bill at the end of the month for cooking and heating water by using coal would be found to be very considerable as compared with the cost of wood and charcoal in, at least, many of our stations. The difficulty as regards the use of coal by Natives for cooking lies in the fact that all Hindus in every household must cook their food themselves, and for each meal, and that coal is not easily ignited, and requires a considerable draught to keep it alight. But even if this difficulty could be overcome—and it would be by no means an easy matter from the point of view of cost—we should come to the second practical difficulty of the coal smoke and coal flavour. We have not yet felt able to test the peculiar charm of chapatties roasted or baked on burning cow-dung—the common practice in Upper India—but very probably the piquancy which this gives to the cake would be lost in baking it over a coal fire in a similar way. This could, of course, be met by using an oven of some kind; but here, again, the question of cost comes in—a hole in the ground costs nothing. The use of coal for domestic purposes by the Native seems, in fact, when it comes to details, to be still a long way off; but the consumption for brick burning, and by bakers and sweetmeat makers is steadily increasing in all large towns, and it would appear that we must wait for this manifestation of its value to take slow effect as the only probable way of gradually bringing it into more general use.

A GALLANT BOAR.

(Pioneer.)

Well known to many is the pluck of a boar who has died fighting to the bitter end, and I am one who thinks their praises cannot be too often told. Let me, then, dedicate a few lines to the merits one who succeeded recently, not 100 miles from Allahabad, in sending six disconsolate riders and mangled horses home, whose death was not accomplished for more than an hour; and who carried a spear clean through his body for most of this time, callous of pain, and died like a hero. It was one of the most exciting runs it has been my lot to share in.

Invitations having been received to a luxurious and comfortable house from a host whose only thought is to treat his guests right royally, and whose patent brew of cup is unequalled, sportsmen eager for the fray flocked in. "Ally Sloper" of course was there, and to him we are greatly indebted for the able manner in which he plied us with well-iced drinks en route. "Bobb's" came on his hobby-horse. "The Masher," with new gee gees which he sincerely hopes will take him in the direction of pigs in lieu of the reverse one, strolled in with his usual kuch-purwani air, arm-in-arm with the "Porrieger," a noted billiard celebrity, and a sure draw when awake. Let C stand for "Chappie," no longer the slim youth of days gone by, but still the keen sportsman with a deadly spear. "Bunthorne" on an old and thin caster, but one ready to eat anything within his reach. "The Long-one" on a new purchase, and "Slim-un" on the old stager. Lastly, "New-Hand," on a bay, made up the party; but all regretted the absence of the "Hoofler," owing to his having run a splinter into his groin. Particulars of this accident can be obtained from "The Plunger."

Early breakfast was followed by a quiet ride to the cover side, where some 200 coolies, under the able generalship of our kind host, were drawn up in lines; and the way in which they advanced, wheeled and concentrated their attack on places suspected of concealing an enemy, led one to think that there was still much left unwritten in the "Latest Development of Military Attack," as taught to studious subalterns at Garrison Courses. At all events, this onslaught was more than the pigs could stand, for, after dislodging a few, a couple of boars were started, and, giving fair sport, fell to the spears of the "Long-one" and "Slim-un." A further development of tactics on the part of the general and his coolies resulted in drawing the boar to whose death these few lines are dedicated.

He was not a big pig, but his cunning, pluck and strength made up for this deficiency. Taking the field at a rattling spin across the open, he floored everyone by crossing some "pank" and gaining some 200 yards on "Ally" and "Slim-un," who first manipulated the obstacle. But his start was fatal to the "Slim-un," who, on trying to make up lost ground, indulged in an imperial cropper, and lost a good deal of leather. "Ally" meanwhile got on terms with the pig, and a very bad bargain "Ally" made of it, for the pig cut his horse in the fore-arm, a frightful gash some 15 inches long, and a good 1½ inch deep. The pig then turned to the right and was making for some nullahs, when "Bunthorne" and his caster crawled up, but only to receive a charge which sent them both flying. This insult was too much for the caster, who sloped and left "Bunthorne" to his own devices, which consisted in dancing round the pig in comical posture, spear in hand. The attitude was not æsthetic, but "too utterly utter;" and happy was "Bunthorne" that the twenty lovesick maidens were not there. The "Slim-un," having succeeded in picking himself and remnants up, came to the rescue, and being charged by the pig, drove his spear clean through him. Away sailed piggy, spear and all, and succeeded in reaching the nullahs before the "Long-one," "Chappie," and "New-Hand," arrived on the scene. From this stronghold he repeatedly charged and cut the horses of all these three in succession. "New-Hand" evidently thought the right thing to do was to give a pig a real good chance and let him get well home; but his misplaced confidence was sorely abused, and he and his horse had a bad time of it all round. The pig then sulked in the water, but being ignominiously pelted by coolies with clods of earth, rose up once more in wrath and tried to wreak his vengeance on one of them, who mysteriously disappeared down a hole, thus escaping a lesson not easily forgotten. However, this was piggy's faux pas, for he took to the open, where he got a couple more spears from the "Slim-un" and one from "Porrieger," whose sudden and, for him, rapid first appearance on the scene surprised everyone. This latter sportsman's delicate touch, though excellent on a billiard table, had no appreciable effect on piggy; but piggy's had on him, for he cut his horse and left the "Porrieger" manfully struggling back into the saddle from an uncomfortable position near the horse's ears. This was the last effort, and a noble one, of one of the pluckiest boars ever met with by—

MUHAMEDANS. (Bengal Times.)

In the Madras Presidency the number of officials required for a fair proportion as those actually employed may be contrasted thus:—Fair proportion of Europeans and Eurasians, six; as contrasted with employed, 295; Brahmans, 235 and 3,517; other Hindoos, 5,584 and 2,078; Mussulmans, 409 and 265; Native Christians, 115 and 227. From this table it will be seen that while Muhamedans have about three-eighths of their share, Europeans and Eurasians have about forty-six times, Brahmans about fifteen times, Native Christians twice, and other Hindoos rather more than one-third their right ratio of appointments.

But if we consider that a much larger percentage of Hindoos count as among rural and other classes, as compared with Mussulmans, their loss of proportion is probably felt less than by Muhamedans. Now, if we accept the estimate prescribed by Government of a fair standard, we shall be at a loss how to compute this obvious disparity. Another consideration suggests itself. Let us allow that Brahmans commend themselves to official patronage by their superior educational attainments, and that these are allowed to weigh in according to their preference. Is it, we would ask, essential to efficiency for public functions that educational excellence should be a sole qualification for place and reward? May not other candidates, with somewhat inferior attainments, aspire to favour, being eligible in other respects? Let us, for instance, suppose a time should arrive when India is made an arena of struggle for supremacy of Empire between England and a foreign Power—say Russia. In such an event to whom should we look for co-operation, upon whom depend for that practical form of loyalty which consists in standing side by side in mortal conflict against a common foe? Could we calculate upon a Brahman, a Hindoo, or any other class of Native, except a Muhamedan, unless indeed, we sought our allies from amongst tribes trained to arms and to deeds of intrepidity from which most Hindoos would shrink with fear and trembling? Amidst flashing of bayonets, roaring of artillery, bursting of shells, and cries of wounded and dying soldiers, who would stand by us to breast the battle's shock? We confidently say Muhamedans, whether of the North-West or Bengal, would serve us in better stead than Hindoos, as a rule, while Bengalees are out of reckoning altogether in any warlike demonstration. Is it fair, then, that they should have so large a share of State patronage with so small a claim to consideration in comparison with men who happen to lack but one quality, supposing always they fall short of State requirement, for upon this point hinges a question of equitable distribution of office. In a rivalry between Muhamedans and others it is not a question of who makes most marks, but who attains such a standard as proves him eligible for serving Government. Supposing, then, other merits equal, which of course they cannot be, as Mussulmans, from a political point of view, must stand in importance far above others, we consider it unfair that their one weak point should place them at so disastrous a disadvantage as contrasted with others, who are by no manner of means their equals if gauged by their merits all round.

THE RICE TRADE.

(Indian Planter's Gazette.)

English rice millers and merchants have a grievance which is very strongly felt. Discussing the matter from a free-trade point of view, they urge that rice, far from enjoying any such boon, has to struggle against a repressive impost that is of ruinous effect. There was, up to 1873, an export duty upon wheat sent out of India, but in that year it was repealed, and since then the Indian wheat trade has multiplied tenfold. But the export duty of 6d. per cwt., on rice sent out of India and Burma has been maintained, and since 1873 the rice trade of the United Kingdom has decreased 27 per cent. These two matters have a direct bearing upon each other. The uncleaned rice that is brought to this country is manufactured into white rice, rice flour, and rice meal, and there is direct competition between the two latter products and similar wheat products. Hence the 6d. per cwt. export tax upon rice places the English rice merchants and millers at a direct disadvantage in competing with wheat millers and corn merchants. Nor is this all. The export duty is the same upon both cleaned and rough rice, and this practically gives the miller in Burma an advantage of about 5s. per ton in shipping cleaned rice to the Continent. Then, when the rice from Burma reaches France, it is admitted duty free, whereas if it be sent to France from England an import duty is levied of 30s. 6d. per ton, and this differential treatment has simply ruined the English rice trade with the Continent. When to these grievances is added the fact that in some Crown colonies a duty is levied upon rice that renders business impossible, it is not surprising that the rice trade is endeavouring to bring its troubles under the notice of Parliament. They have enlisted the services of Mr. Baden-Powell in the matter, and, when opportunity offers, the honourable member will have little difficulty in showing that the policy that has been pursued has had a disastrous effect both upon invested capital and the employment of labour in rice mills.

BENGAL.

The Bengal Economic Museum is a popular place of resort. It was visited by more than 400,000 persons in 1886-87, the monthly average being 34,000, as against a monthly average attendance of 24,500 in the preceding year. The number of visitors was greatest in October and February; in the former month the Durga Pooja holidays were observed, and in the latter month 6,723 persons visited the Museum on the day of the celebration of the Jubilee of the Queen-Empress.

The first auctions of the new season's tea was to be held at Calcutta on Thursday, the 12th May, when it was expected that about 4,000 chests would be brought forward. Teas from the Darjiling district and the Duars are now arriving freely in Calcutta, and those from the latter are said to be good useful samples. A small business has already been done by private sale to the extent of about 2,300 chests shipped direct to England. The out-turn up to the present is somewhat behind that of last year, but the deficiency is being rapidly made up. Musters from Cachar, Assam, Sylhet, and Chittagong are arriving rather slowly, as until lately rain was generally wanted, but the latest reports state that good rain had fallen in Sibsagar, Gauhati, Silchar, and Sylhet, though in the latter district accompanied by hail which had done much damage to some gardens. The quality of the musters already arrived, specially those from Cachar, shows a decided improvement over those of last year.

THE case of the Burdwan adoption came on for hearing before Messrs. Halliday and Beames at the Board of Revenue, Calcutta, on May 7, when the proceedings were opened by Mr. Woodroffe, on behalf of the Dowager Maharani, objecting to Mr. Beames' sitting to hear the case, on account of his being prejudiced, and his having expressed an opinion in writing on it. Mr. Evans, for the Maharani, contended that Mr. Beames was not in any way prejudiced, and read a letter from that gentleman in which he had expressed an opinion in favour of some other person being adopted. Mr. Halliday then said that he did not think Mr. Beames was in any way prejudiced in regard to the adoption, and that he considered it necessary that Mr. Beames should sit with him to give him the benefit of his experience and advice. This question being settled, the rest of the afternoon was taken up by Mr. Woodroffe arguing that the proposed adoption of Lala Bun Behari's son was contrary to Hindu law, as he was the only son of his father. The arguments on this point were not concluded when the case was adjourned.

MADRAS.

THE Madras Government closed their review of the report on the administration of the District Municipalities in the Southern Presidency for 1885-86 with the remark that, on the whole, a considerable advance was made in Municipal administration during the year, and that the greater freedom given to councils under the new Act was worthily used. Amongst other things they pointed out that, as regards supervision and management, except in Coonoor, where there is a paid chairman, and in Ootacamund, where there is a paid secretary, the establishments are, on the whole, of an inexpensive kind, but they require an amount of supervision on the part of the chairman and the council, which Government fear they do not very often get. Government candidly confess that the tax on arts, &c., is, for several reasons, the most unpopular of the municipal taxes. Though its abolition, they say, is not practicable, they would, however, be glad to see its incidence lessened, wherever possible, by the exemption from taxation of the lowest classes of the schedule. As regards the checking of municipal accounts, Government trust that the present system, by which the accounts are scrutinised by the Accountant-General, will not only improve the system of account keeping, but also prevent embezzlements, which have of late become frequent.

THE question of reducing expenditure in the cost of permanent way materials for railways is at present engaging the attention of the Railways in this Presidency, and in lieu of the present Ibbotson's patent fishbolts, which are found to slacken, the Madras Railway Company have indented, as an experiment, for Grove's patent washers for a length of ten miles. The South Indian Railway Company at the same time are making vast experiments in the use of 50lb. rails for heavy work. The Government of India are meanwhile not idle in the direction of reducing expenditure, for the Railway Companies in this Presidency have been requested to limit their stock of locomotives by keeping the engines longer in steam than at present, and thus getting more work out of them. At present the engines do what is called an eight-hours' run, or a little more. It has been suggested that they be kept in steam for forty-eight hours. The drawback anticipated, should this proposal be adopted, is that the responsibility of keeping the engine in order, consumption of fuel, &c., will be divided by more than one driver, and thus lead to difficulty in attaching blame.

NEVER again can Madras be called a benighted Presidency. They understand vegetarianism there, and have invented a new cult called "indirect vegetarianism," which is wonderfully like ordinary eating. An indirect vegetarian binds himself, under terrific penalties, only to "eat the meat of such animals as live on vegetable food;" and that he will continue such abstinence throughout his life, except under medical advice. Setting aside as untenable the theory that man-eating sheep and carnivorous kine exist in the Southern Presidency, we are brought face to face with the awful inference, that the Madrassis eat dogs and cats, and that their medical advisers encourage them to do so. It may be interesting to Madras to learn that most Englishmen in Upper India have been "indirect vegetarians" for years and years.

BOMBAY.

MISS EDITH PECHER, M.D., L.R. & Q.C.P.I., and L.M., has been granted six months' leave.

MR. J. F. FLEET, C.S., C.I.E., Collector of Sholapore, has been allowed eighteen months' furlough.

MR. H. F. SILCOCK, C.S., has been appointed Assistant Collector from the date of the retirement of Mr. A. A. C. Jervoise.

THE Bank of Bombay on the 5th May reduced its rate of interest on demand loans on Government Paper to nine per cent.

TEN days' quarantine is imposed on pilgrim ships going to Jeddah from Calcutta or Bombay at the Turkish Quarantine Lazaretto of Camaran.

MAJOR F. FIREBRACE, R.E., has been confirmed in his appointment as Joint Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department, Railways.

DURING the absence of Colonel Merriman, R.E., on furlough, Captain E. C. Spilsbury, R.E., will act as Executive Engineer, Bombay Defences.

CAPTAIN MRADE, Superintendent of Moghyars in Rajpootana and Central India, acts for Major Barr at Rewah, when the latter goes to Gwalior.

MR. WALLACE, the Professor of Agriculture of the Edinburgh University, arrived in Bombay by the last mail. Mr. Wallace has come to India to make a study of Indian agriculture.

As a temporary measure, Mr. W. C. Hughes, M. Inst. C.E., and Mr. W. H. LeQuesne will act as Secretary and Under-Secretary to Government in the Public Works Department respectively.

THE HON. MR. FORBES ADAM presided at a meeting of the Board of the Victoria Technical Institute held at the Secretariat on the 5th May. The representatives of the Press were not admitted to the proceedings.

IN the absence of Colonel C. Wodehouse, Lieutenant-Colonel G. E. Handcock acts as Political Agent of Kattywar, the latter's duties as President of the Rajasthanik Court being performed by Major J. M. Hunter.

MR. W. F. O'DONOUGHUE, officiating Examiner of Government Accounts, Southern Mahratta Railway, has been appointed to officiate as Examiner of Guaranteed Railway Accounts, Madras, during the absence of Major J. S. Biscoe.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL W. A. SALMON acts as Political Agent of Cutch during the absence of Colonel G. R. Goodfellow; and Captain J. W. Wray acts as Joint Administrator of Sangli during the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel W. A. Salmon, or until further orders.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDH, AND PUNJAB.

THE liquidation of the Cawnpore Ginning Company is still dragging its slow length along. The remaining assets of the concern are being expended in litigation against certain of the shareholders who repudiate their liability in respect of the value of the shares said to be standing in their names; and as several of these gentlemen have succeeded in establishing their immunity, the prospects of the liquidation are not very bright. Indeed, it is already quite evident that no return of capital whatever will be made to the shareholders.

AMONG the matters recently before the Punjab Government was a despatch forwarded through the Government of India from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Teheran, regarding a complaint made by some Samarkand pilgrims, that they had been cheated by a servant at a caravanserai in Lahore. It is not often that a servant's misdeeds form the subject of diplomatic correspondence, and on that ground the Lahore dependent, who is probably neither better nor worse than his fellows, has claims to notoriety.

THE negotiations with the Native Chiefs about the land for the proposed Simla Railway do not indicate any intention on the part of Government to proceed immediately with the construction of the line. The negotiations are of the nature of inquiries, the purpose of which is to ascertain that, should the railway ever be taken in hand, what would be probable outlay required for the land needed for the line. The Government is willing at any time to make over the construction of the railway, on suitable terms, to private capitalists, but has no money of its own to spare for the project at present.

THE Punjab Chiefs' College seems to be answering the purpose for which it was established. There are at present on the rolls of the College, say, 20 boys, who may be thus classified:—Nawab of Pataude (Delhi), 1; Nawab of Tonk (Dera Isma'il Khan), 1; grandson of the Jam of Lus Beyla, 1; members of the Nawab of Maler Kotla's family, 3; Sirdars and Khans with private property, 12; Scholarship holders, 10; son of the Sirdar of Buria, 1. One Sirdar has just left the College to take up the management of his own estate. Before leaving he wrote to the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab expressing his thanks for the care bestowed upon him, and stating his willing to build, at his own expense, a small hospital for the use of the College.

THE report of the Cawnpore Experimental farm for the kharif season of 1886 adds nothing absolutely new to Indian agricultural science; but the experiments carried out confirmed in a remarkable manner the belief that deep ploughing is better than shallow ploughing for cotton, and that the effect of the deep ploughing is greatly enhanced by manuring. Experiments with maize showed that the country way of sowing produces a heavier crop than the American method, though the single cobs obtained in the latter case are larger and plumper. Many of the farm experiments were brought to an abrupt end by a heavy hailstorm at the end of October, which destroyed most of the crops.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

A SECTION of No. 4, British Field Hospital, has been transferred from Mandalay to Bhamo.

COLONEL T. TRUEMAN, S.C., has been granted an extension of leave for three months.

MAJOR-GENERAL SIR HUGH GOUGH, V.C., K.C.B., has been posted to the Lahore Division.

LIEUTENANT FISHER, 5th Bombay Light Infantry, has been ordered to Ava to command a company.

MAJOR W. CLARK, 1st Oxfordshire Light Infantry, having returned to India from special service in Burma, has been ordered home to join his regiment.

LIEUT.-COLONEL W. KERR, the Buffs, has been ordered to England to join the 2nd Battalion on promotion.

CAPTAIN C. E. GUBBINS has been permitted to proceed to England on medical certificate from Burma, in anticipation of leave.

MAJOR J. T. CUMMINS, M.S.C., has been appointed Officiating Commandant, 4th Cavalry, Hyderabad Contingent.

LIEUTENANT E. R. PENROSE, 23rd Bombay Light Infantry, has been appointed Station Staff Officer at Pouk.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL C. J. WALTER has been appointed Commandant of the 8th Bengal Infantry, vice Colonel Smith, retired.

LIEUTENANT H. KENNEDY, 1st Bengal Infantry, has been appointed Post Transport Officer at Kaulin; and Lieutenant C. E. Handley, 21st Madras Infantry, Post Transport Officer at Yeu.

MAJOR P. D. JEFFREYS, on return from Field Service, has been posted as Assistant Adjutant-General to the Sirhind Division, vice Lieutenant-Colonel Morley, transferred to the Rawal Pindi Division.

LIEUTENANT A. WALLACE, 27th Punjab Infantry, has been appointed Staff Officer to the Shan Column, and Lieutenant Burton, 17th Bengal Cavalry, to the charge of the Transport Shan line of communications.

THE following officers of Royal Engineers have been appointed Assistant Field Engineers, Upper Burma Field Force, subject to confirmation and sanction:—Lieutenants Stokes-Roberts, G. D. Close, C. C. Percival, H. J. Huleatt, and R. F. Sorsbie.

VOLUNTEER J. J. LENEHAN, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, one of last year's Indian Volunteer Wimbledon team, died at Calcutta on the 30th April, after a few weeks' illness. His name appears in the last Gazette of India for transfer to Bombay.

THE British Infantry, which will go into camp on the Khojak for road-making, will, in the first instance, be those for whom there is no barrack accommodation in Quetta at present. Their strength is stated at four companies, but they will be accompanied by the 2-1 Scottish Division Mountain Battery. The effect of this will be that the troops can now be railed direct to Killa Abdulla on the Khwaja Amran slope.

CAPTAIN GUBBINS, Second in Command 3rd Hyderabad Cavalry, Upper Burma, having proceeded on sick furlough to Europe, Lieutenants Meade and McSwiney have been appointed pro tem Second in Command and Adjutant respectively.

CONVERSION OF INDIA STOCK ACT, 1887.—This Act, to which reference was made in the advertisement issued from the India Office on the 19th of April, has received the Royal Assent. Under it, powers of attorney and requests for transmission of dividend warrants by post, in force in respect of any India Four per Cent. Stock converted into India Three and a-Half per Cent. Stock, are made applicable to the latter Stock; and, among the facilities given to trustees for the conversion of India Four per Cent. Stock into India Three and a-Half per Cent. Stock, the Act provides that, when the holder in a joint account is an infant or a person of unsound mind, or is under any other disability, or is beyond the seas, the other holders or holder may, with the consent of a Judge of the High Court of Justice in England and Ireland, or in Scotland of a Judge of the Court of Session, exchange such Stock or any part thereof for India Three and a-Half per Cent. Stock.

OBITUARY.

SIR ROBERT N. C. HAMILTON.

The death occurred last week of Sir Robert North Collicie Hamilton, K.C.B., of Avoncliffe, Stratford-on-Avon, in the eighty-sixth year of his age. The deceased had held several high offices in India. In 1859 he was appointed a member of the Council of the Governor-General, and from 1854 to 1860 was Agent to the Governor-General in Central India. He was thanked by Parliament for his services during the Indian Mutiny. Sir Robert Hamilton was a Justice of the Peace for Warwickshire, and twice unsuccessfully contested South Warwickshire in the Liberal interest. For many years he was chairman of the Stratford Bench of county magistrates, and was Deputy Lieutenant of Warwickshire. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Major Frederic Harding Hamilton, of Baraset, Stratford-on-Avon.

RUKHMABAI'S CASE.—“We regret to see,” says the Statesman, “that the abolition of infant marriage is being mixed up with Rukhmabai's grievance most unwisely. To force such a change upon the people would be to abuse the power we possess as foreign rulers in the most despotic and fatal manner.” Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof, and we should be glad if Rukhmabai's case could be dealt with independently of the question of infant marriage. That it can be so dealt with is evident, and that is what Professor Wordsworth's Committee is going to do. The direct question raised by that case is this—why should a girl be forced to live with a man as her husband whom she does not like? The Committee seeks to get the present law changed so far as it is not good Hindu law. We think beyond that the Committee does not profess to go. As for the suggestion that Her Majesty should, in commemoration of the Jubilee year, proclaim child and premature marriages invalid, we are far from accepting it as either practical or sound. We have repeatedly said—though we have been repeatedly misrepresented by interested parties as holding a contrary view—that legislative interference is undesirable in such matters, though we have as repeatedly pointed out the absurdity of the argument that Government have not yet interfered with our customs. But our quarrel is with those who are acting in these matters like the dog-in-the-manger. Admitting that foreign interference is undesirable, if you go on to say that we should do something ourselves, a number of pleas and excuses for inaction are invented and attempts are made to justify existing practices. This is the present situation, which cannot fail to strike any impartial observer.

INDIA AND THE IMPERIAL INSTITUTE.—Under the auspices of the East India Association, a meeting of officers and gentlemen interested in the affairs of the British Empire in the East was held, May 23, in the Westminster Town Hall (Sir Richard Temple, G.C.S.I., M.P., presiding), for the purpose of considering the relations of India with the Imperial Institute, as presented in an elaborate address by General Sir Orfeur Cavenagh, K.C.S.I. Sir Orfeur urged that the advantages likely to accrue to India from the existence of the Imperial Institute are certainly deserving of the consideration of all who are connected with the administration or otherwise interested in the prosperity of our Indian Empire. It is evident that some stimulus is needed in order that the resources of India—where there are 100,000,000 of acres of virgin soil, over which the plough has never passed—may be fully developed, and the existence of the Imperial Institute ought to prove a powerful instrument towards attracting the needed presence of increased European skill, energy, and capital. A mine of wealth exists in the Indian Empire were it only efficiently worked; but whilst, almost weekly, companies are formed and prospectuses issued for spending English money in foreign countries, until recently, when the search for gold occasioned excitement, no purely English company had ever been constituted for the investment of capital in India, the advancement of the cultivation of tea, coffee, and indigo being the promotion of the Anglo-Indian element. In concluding a resumé of the latent capabilities of India, General Cavenagh pointed out that the interests of England and India are now so interwoven that no efforts should be wanting to still further cement the union of the two countries and confirm Her Majesty's Asiatic subjects in their allegiance to the British Crown, and that the Imperial Institute would tend to this desirable result, and, in the words of the Prince of Wales, “will promote the industrial and commercial resources of Her Majesty's dominions in various parts of the world, and be expressive of that unity and co-operation which Her Majesty desires should prevail amongst all classes and races of her extended Empire.” A discussion followed, closing with the customary votes of thanks.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

JOURNALS KEPT IN HYDERABAD, KASHMIR, SIKKIN, AND NEPAL.*

The public, even as regards that portion of it which is familiar with the East, know so little about the internal economy of the States which border our Indian Empire that enlightenment upon the subject at the hands of one so entitled to speak with authority as Sir Richard Temple should be highly appreciated. Perhaps, too, the State of Hyderabad is little less than a sealed book to many who will take up these volumes, seeking at once amusement and instruction; and assuredly there is much to learn. It seems hardly credible, in these days of enlightenment and civilisation, that the Nizam should have set his face against the construction of a railway to his capital. Why, foresooth? Lest some of his rebellious relations "might jump into the train and be off to Bombay or elsewhere, and that such an occurrence would bring disgrace on his Highness!" Verily this is a new illustration of the homely saying, "Save me from my relations!" Again, it seems somewhat astounding that the Ruler of the Dekkan absolutely refused to take part in a large festive ceremony, because he had dreamed that there was something wrong from an "alchemistic" point of view! But all this frivolity pales before the transcendent un wisdom which prompted this royal personage to refuse to consult an English doctor lest there should be treachery; and so he died. But what is to be thought of the extraordinary errata (at page 151, Vol. I.) that the Bombay Government wanted the Nizam to "dismantle the Fort at Raichur because the railway station was proposed to be put within musket shot of it! This is "Zabardasti" with a vengeance!

As regards Hyderabad, however, interest will chiefly centre on the Dewan, Sir Salar Jung, the most astute and talented minister who ever ruled the destinies of the kingdom. And what a tale of disappointment, of pushing enterprise on the one part, and of stolid indifference on the side of his august master! Plots, intrigues, petty meannesses, well-nigh broke the heart of the ablest Native reformer of the nineteenth century, who, alone, amidst a seething mass of corruption and iniquity, kept free from the paths of chicanery and falsehood—only, alas! to be sacrificed on the altar of jealousy and dislike.

But quitting this somewhat depressing scene of Oriental duplicity we pass on to Kashmir. That lovely vale—what pen can do it justice! What language can convey even the faintest idea of the glories of the most glorious scenery known to man! Fancy 250 miles of snow-capped mountains, all radiant with the varied tints of a setting sun! Imagine lesser hills, with every hue of delicate green, grey, and purple! And then, to add variety to the scene, there is the placid river meandering in calm quietude amidst the grandeur which meets the eye at every turn! When the brain is almost distracted with such an exquisite picture, carry the imagination to the lakes at the capital, and look "on the hills, with their purple rocks and velvet herbage, appearing even more sombre and glorious when reflected in the water; or the broad sheets of water purpled with the lotus by day, and whitened by the water-lily by moonlight; or the darkness of night heightened by the bonfires, of which the blaze was repeated on the glittering surface of the water." It can well be realised how the Emperor Jahangir, as he surveyed such loveliness, exclaimed, with fervour and enthusiasm, "If there be Paradise on earth, here it is!"

Scarcely less beautiful is the region of Sikkim, with its huge mountains—the highest in the world—with its superb rhododendrons and other shrubs; with its impenetrable pine forests, so weird in effect, so solemn in appearance! But there is here a terrible drawback in regard to the weather. "The rain it raineth every day" could well be said of Sikkim, for the down-pour is incessant, and unless the traveller is not drenched by the heavens the mists and frogs accomplish the task well-nigh as effectually. Even the very flowers have the colour washed out of them!

Lastly, there remains to notice Nepal, a land where "there are more temples than houses, and more idols than men." A land unlike, in all respects, to any other region in India, with its characteristic architecture, founded on the Chinese example of early times, with its sturdy-built, powerful, and muscular inhabitants—warlike, albeit unsophisticated and dirty.

It will be seen that Sir Richard Temple's volumes traverse a wide area of country. They are interesting, and no less instructive; abounding in information, and replete with details. Their distinguished author had abundant opportunities of studying the people, their ways, and their habits. That he availed himself of his chances "goes without for to say." There are some excellent pictures and maps, and what is, perhaps, more noticeable, a very lucid, historical summary of the various kingdoms traversed, all combining to make one of the most valuable works in connection with India which have appeared for a lengthened time.

There is a wonderful charm about Dr. Stinde's writings even when read under the disadvantage of a translation, and apart from the scenes around which they centre. They appeal at once to the experiences of everyday life. They emphasise our motives, they lay bare the springs of life, they show us as others see us, full of inconsistencies and peculiarities. Vices, virtues, successes, failures, all crowd together in indiscriminate confusion; and as we read we laugh. We grow sad, we are hopeful, we are despondent; we pluck the flowers of pleasure, we eat the fruit of remorse; in a word, we realise that we are members of the poor fallen human race.

Some of the chapters are, too, really superb. Take, for example, the trial scene where Frau Buchholz is placed in dock for using abusive language towards her daughter's cook. The picture is inimitable. Even Dickens in all his glory need not have been ashamed at having penned such an amusing lifelike account of the poor matron's perplexities and troubles. The language is so droll, the expressions so inexpressibly funny, the chapter is most—to use a Yankee phrase—side-splitting. Who, again, could read without a roar of laughter the account of an amateur attempt on the part of mother and daughter to create a pleasant little surprise for the head of the family by the simple means of touching up the kitchen passage? How the new colour did not match the old; how again and again a visit had to be paid to the shop for a fresh tint; how the thing would not and did not go right; how the maiden upset the paint-pot on the floor; how the stain could not be removed; and, lastly, how all the daubing cost more than would have been the case had a regular workman been employed is just too droll!

For penny readings the volume should be most welcome. There is scarcely a scene but what would bring down the house, and nothing is as yet hackneyed. It is seldom that a reviewer's lot is as pleasant as has been the case in awarding unstinted praise to the "Buchholz Family."

The June number of the Illustrated Naval and Military Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) is an excellent one, both in letter-press and illustrations. The first place must still be given to General Mitford's continuation of his pleasant and interesting journey, "Orient and Occident." Staff-Surgeon Dickinson contributes a concise and explanatory account of the Corps of Commissioners, replete with information. The journal of H.M.S. Boscawen during the Baltic operations in 1854, and in a cyclone off Bermuda, kept by Admiral Winnington-Ingram, contains much new information, and "A Sleigh Drive to Niagara," by Major Edward Whyte, will well repay perusal. The exhaustive paper on the Russian Army (ten illustrations), by C. L'Estrange, will attract the attention of all military readers, although the writer has been obliged to compress his information into a limited space. Captain Gall shows himself to be a reliable authority on "Modern Tactics," and "Warrior" discovers (not difficult to do) some flaws in our military system. The Editor touches the question of field batteries for the Volunteer force in a brief but thoroughly practical paper, in which he says (and all who have a right to give an opinion will agree with him) that "what this country sadly wants is more field and other artillery. We have not nearly enough guns or men to work them."

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"Samuel Taylor Coleridge," by Alois Brandt (English Edition, by Lady Eastlake). (John Murray). INDIAN INVESTMENTS.—II.

It is gratifying to find that the poor and friendless Rupee, which has hitherto been the Cinderella of the Silver Family, has at length found a friend. The Financial News, following up its article upon the Indian Three Per Cents., has now taken that depreciated orphan, the Rupee, under its protection. With a kindly hand it tells the past history of it, when it was in favour and commanded high regard:—

Fifteen years ago gold and silver held to each other a certain relation which made the Indian rupee worth 2s., or the tenth part of a pound. At that time the Indian Government could borrow equally well in gold or silver; in sterling or rupees. Any advantage there might be was in favour of the silver coin, for the rupee generally commanded a small premium in exchange. Many of the Indian loans of those days were contracted in the Native currency, which was silver, or paper convertible into silver. The credit of the Government was good enough to admit of its borrowing at 4 or 4½ per cent., and the rupee, being then worth its full legal value of 2s., "rupee paper," as these currency loans were called, commanded nearly as good a price as India Sterling Bonds. Had nothing happened to disturb the relations between gold and silver, it would ere now have risen to a substantial premium. Not only was it a popular investment at Calcutta and Bombay, but there were regular dealings in it in London. All the Indian banks have held large quantities of it, and a good deal found its way into the hands of the public. While the fluctuations of exchange kept within moderate compass, they gave a zest to business in it, making it a good speculative medium as well as a sound investment stock.

But evil days arrived, and this child of Silver became an outcast and a pariah from financial circles. Prince Bismarck inaugurated what has been justly termed "a suicidal war on silver," never dreaming, however, that his action would have the dire consequences which have since followed it. He did not contemplate "upsetting and disorganising all the currencies and national exchanges in the world," but this is what he did. As our financial contemporary points out, not only was silver thrown out of use as currency at the very time when there was an increasing necessity for it, but all international trade and investments depending on silver were equally thrown out of gear. Securities, which in themselves are quite as valuable as they were fifteen years ago, have been depreciated by 20, 30, or even 40 per cent., and although the credit of the Government responsible for them may be (and is) really better than it was fifteen years ago, yet because their value is expressed in one kind of money instead of another they are almost as much discredited as if they had undergone an essential deterioration. "In little more than a decade," continues our contemporary, "Rupee paper, which represents a large part of the National Debt of India, has fallen from par to 72. It has been as low as 67½, consequently at its lowest price there was a shrinkage of its value of exactly one-third. Even national insolvency could hardly have caused a greater fall. States have, in fact, suspended payment without inflicting greater loss on their creditors. If Russia were to commit bankruptcy to-day we question if her Five per Cent. Bonds could be purchased at 72, and there is a host of so-called securities in the market selling as high as "Rupee paper" which has not paid a penny of return for years, and possibly never will.

This, so far as "Rupee paper" is concerned, is an extraordinary as well as deplorable state of affairs, but for the silver lining to the cloud which the Financial News calls attention to. It does not concern the present generation of investors to be told that had silver remained undisturbed, Rupee stock, which commanded par fifteen years ago, would to-day have been at a high premium; but it is worth noticing, what our contemporary also points out, that at its current price of 72, with exchange so low as 1s. 4½d., Rupee paper yields to the investor 4½ per cent:—

A person buying 4½ per cent. "Rupee paper" at 72 can have his interest collected for him half-yearly by any Indian bank or exchange broker, and he will receive in sterling money the equivalent of 4½ per cent., or nearly half as much again as he can get on any other Government loan of equal rank. He has another advantage not generally known. "Rupee paper" is the only security dealt in here with accrued interest, that is to say, the buyer has to pay interest in full from the date of the last coupon to the date of purchase, and when he sells he can claim interest to the date of sale.

Why the advantages thus enumerated have not attracted investors to a greater extent is a question not easily answered. One reason may be that the investor dreads that the price of silver may fall still lower. But even then there is balm in Gilead. If the Rupee were to fall to 1s. "Rupee paper" would still pay 3 per cent. in sterling money. Our contemporary, however, does not take the pessimist view. On the contrary, he looks forward hopefully to the rehabilitation of silver, and its restoration to the legal and natural position it should hold as part of the world's currency. "It is quite conceivable," he says, "that within the next twelve months we may see important monetary changes all favourable to silver, and no less so to silver securities, among which by far the most important in this market is 'Rupee paper.' The risk of its going lower is infinitesimal, and the chances of its having a great and sudden improvement are considerable. The odds are on the side of present buyers." At the value of the Rupee as 1s. purchasers of Rupee paper to-day would still gain 3 per cent. in sterling money. At the exchange of 2s. they would, purchasing at 72, gain 6½ per cent. It may, perhaps, look as too roseate a view to watch for the latter return; but if, as we said in our last issue, the British investor will only shake off a little of his ignorance regarding India, and take advantage of the attractions she offers to him, the result will be profit to himself and a rise all round in Indian Securities.

THE AMEER AT HOME.

(BY A CABUL CORRESPONDENT.)

The "Yellow Pamphlet" is not the only production which has appeared from the Ameer's pen. He is a man of unceasing activity and boundless energy, which, as in the well-known case of Mr. Gladstone, find one means of outlet in the promulgation of his views on various matters. He daily sits in open Durbar from ten till six, keeping the sword of justice—and here the phrase is used in something more than a metaphorical sense—well employed during the time. He then retires for a while, and after taking rest and refreshments, employs himself till late at night in the transaction of State affairs. Labour to him is love, and he personally attends to every detail of his administration down to the very minutest. We have been told of Frederick the Great, as an illustration of his extravagant activity, that if a traveller wished for a good place to see a review he had to write to Frederick, and wait till he had received an answer signed by the great king's own hand. In the same way, if one of the Ameer's soldiers wants a day's leave, he has to apply for it direct to his Highness and wait his will. Oriental nations are fond of seeking redress for all sorts of grievances under the sun by making long-winded petitions to the ruling powers. Abdur Rahman freely receives all petitions presented to him, and, be they ever so long and tedious, he reads them all himself. A member of his household once ventured to suggest that his Highness might well relieve himself of a portion of his work by delegating the duty of reading the petitions, and summarising them for him to some of his officials; but the Ameer would not listen to the proposal. Why, the official might be an honest and an honourable man, but how could he be sure that he might not, though quite innocently, keep back from his notice just the thing he should most desire to know? I may tell you that the Ameer is a shrewd man, and thoroughly knows his business and his position. Ruling as he does amidst wild and ferocious tribes, some of whom are not at all friendly, and may at any moment rise under the lead of any one of the numerous aspirants to the throne of Cabul, he has every need to be wideawake and vigilant. It is almost a necessity of his existence, as the ruler of a heterogeneous mass of lawless mountaineers, that he should be the very essence and embodiment of an absolute autocracy, with all power and authority resting in him and emanating from him. He must hold the reins of Government with an iron grasp, if he would keep them in his hands at all. He displays all the qualities that are essential for a despot in his position—firmness of will, great courage and self-reliance, and a sternness of mind and an obduracy of heart that knows no consideration for human lives or human wrongs. In his Durbar he is seldom in a passion; his coolness and self-possession are remarkable. He would condemn one of his subjects to death with a smile upon his face, as if he had just bestowed a mark of favour upon the wretch. His Penal Code, like the laws of Draco, knows no milder punishment than that of death for a long list of offences, the only distinction that is made is in the degree of torture that is to be applied in proportion to a man's guilt. The Ameer is merciful, when he condemns a thief simply to the gallows or orders him to be beheaded. He is no less merciful, when he seeks to secure the salvation of his soul by blowing away from the cannon's mouth any one who ventures so far to break the commandments of the Prophet as to drink alcoholic beverages. These forms of punishment bring, at all events, the agony of the offender to a speedy termination, and those who have to meet with death in one of these ways are let off lightly enough compared with others who are ordered to be stoned or beaten to death. A robber chief once thought of avenging the death of a relative, which had been caused by the orders of the Ameer, by taking the life of his Highness. He was a man of dauntless courage, and came into the Durbar with a revolver hidden under his clothes, fully resolved to carry out his murderous intent. But when he came there he was unnerved by the majestic presence of the Ameer, and went away. He came in again shortly after, and while he was trying to summon up his courage for the deed, the keen eye of Abdur Rahman suspected from the man's demeanour that he meant some mischief, and therefore the Ameer immediately ordered him to be taken in custody. When the would-be assassin saw that his design was detected, he took courage from despair, and confessed to Abdur Rahman the object of his visit. The man was packed up in a basket and rolled down from the top of a precipice! Here is an actual repetition of the story of the Tarpeian rock from whose summit traitors were hurled down to destruction in the old days of Rome.

Good-natured people may be disposed to call the Ameer a bloodthirsty tyrant and a monster. It is revolting, no doubt, to our feelings to see men marched off to the gallows for petty offences. But we must ever remember what Mr. E. A. Freeman in these days is never tired of inculcating upon students of history, that we should not judge of men's actions by any absolute standard of right and wrong, but should weigh them only in connection with the times in which the men have lived, and the variety of influences which have gone to form their character. Judging Abdur Rahman in this light, I can say that he is only the product of a country which is still far away from the reach of humanising influences. He does not thirst for blood for its own sake. I should not deem it inconceivable that there should be a grain of tenderness in the composition of such a man. If he keeps the sword well employed he does it in the honest belief that for the sake of his personal security, as well as for the sake of peace and order in his dominion, he must resort to that mode of making his power felt and respected by his people.

The Ameer's sternness is, at all events, not an unmixed evil. Robberies are scarcely known in the city now. If ever a theft takes place in the house of an Afghan, the Ameer inflicts a fine upon all his neighbours for not preventing it, and he proceeds in his punishment upon quite a novel and original plan. A policeman goes to the top of the house in which a theft has taken place, and cries out at the top of his voice, like the Muezzin summoning the faithful to prayer. Other policemen are sent out in different directions to determine the farthest points at which the sound could be heard, and all whose houses are situated within the area of that fatal hallooing are taken before the Ameer, who fines them on a scale which is as variable as his mood. Whatever one may have to say about the stern as well as the ludicrous aspect of justice in his Highness's territory, there can be no two opinions on this point, that ever since he has been raised to the throne instances of crime and violence have greatly decreased—at least in Cabul. In former days street brawls and a murder or two in the bazaar were almost of daily occurrence. Now, as the citizens are not allowed to go about with arms, in case of misunderstandings they have only to resort to the milder arbitrament of fisticuffs.

It is not, perhaps, quite a new thing to say the Ameer is not a savage, impervious to civilising influences. He has a real desire to introduce reforms in his capital. Whoever thought of a time when Cabul would boast of having a Municipal Commissioner? You will also be surprised to hear, that we have here for some time past a sort of technical education in good working order, so far as it goes. While you in Bombay have long been exercising your minds in discussing and debating, adopting and rejecting, revising and refining all sorts of plans and proposals, thus justifying in some degree Carlyle's definition of this age as a pre-eminently Talkative Age, the Ameer had simply to say, "Let there be technical education," and there was technical education. A thought no sooner enters the mind of an autocrat than it is transformed, if he chooses, into action. We have a workshop in Cabul where arms are manufactured, and a variety of other useful articles are turned out. Apprentices are admitted to the workshop, and when they have learnt some industry, they are sometimes given loan of money from the public treasury to enable them to set up in business. The Ameer is going to erect an arms factory at Nowshera, near Cabul, the necessary machinery having already arrived from England. The factory will be erected under the superintendence of Mr. Pine, of Messrs. Walsh, Lovett and Company of Calcutta. If your Municipality has projected the great Tansa scheme, we in Cabul will soon have occasion to be proud of our Pagmari, a place about twenty miles from Cabul, celebrated for its water. Iron pipes for bringing the water into the capital have already been ordered out from England. Then, again, a dispensary has lately been opened, chiefly at the suggestion of the Ameer's private tutor, Mr. Pestonji Nusserwanji. It is in charge of a Mahomedan, formerly an apothecary in the British service, and now the head of the Afghan Medical Department. So it would appear that the Ameer's sole desire is not to hoard up money, and that he is amenable in some degree to the influences of civilisation and humanity.

MR. C. G. DODGSON, C.S., will do duty as Assistant Collector, Khandesh.

THE EMIN PACHA RELIEF EXPEDITION.

News has reached Boma, on the Congo, of the departure from Stanley Pool of the last detachment of the Emin Pacha Relief Expedition on its way up the river. One detachment had previously left for Bolobo, a place some little distance above the Pool, and the remainder of the expedition started, all well, on April 29, in the steamers Stanley and Peace, with the Henry Read (the steamer of the Livingstone Mission) towing the hulk of the Florida and a number of lighters. Reuter's Agency has received a communication, dated Boma, March 30, describing the present position of affairs on the Congo:—"It is at Stanley Pool that the progress made by the Independent Congo State during the last six years can best be appreciated. There are now at Stanley Pool nine establishments containing more than fifty Europeans employed in managing either trading stations or missions. Among others there are the English Baptist Mission; Bishop Taylor's Mission at Kimpoko, with eight missionaries, who will shortly have a steamer of their own to navigate the Pool; and, finally, the Livingstone Inland Mission, directed by American missionaries. There are also the French station of Debrassaville, a factory from Rotterdam established last year, a French factory, and the two Belgian stations of Léopoldville and Kinchassa, containing fifteen Europeans, twenty workmen, and a garrison of Houssas and Bangalas. Stanley Pool is at present one of the most active colonies of Central Africa. This activity will greatly develop with the construction of the railway from Matadi to Léopoldville. Then will the centre of Africa really be opened up politically as a new State. It is proposed to lay a railway which, skirting the rapids, shall connect the Lower Congo with the fluvial system of the Upper Congo, the navigable portion of which extends over about 7,500 miles. The line will be from 175 to 200 miles in length. The general government of the Congo is now completely organised. The Governor-General resides at Boma, where he publishes the decrees which are issued at Brussels by King Leopold, Sovereign of the Congo State. Up to this date the United States and Belgium are the only two countries which have accredited Consuls to the Congo State."

THE NEW EGYPTIAN CONVENTION.

The Convention between England and Turkey respecting the affairs of Egypt was signed at the Porte on the 22nd inst., and there are various versions of its details in the columns of the newspapers. Putting all the details together, it is possible to arrive at a pretty accurate idea as to the result of Sir Henry Drummond Wolff's prolonged negotiations with the Sultan. The convention consists of a number of articles, protocols, and notes. The first article declares that the firmans and existing treaties regarding Egypt are to be maintained, except as modified by the new Convention. The second defines the territorial limitations of Egypt. The third declares that the neutralisation and free passage of the Suez Canal, in time of peace and in time of war, is recognised. The fourth declares that the English troops will evacuate Egypt within three years from the signature, provided that there is no risk or danger to the security of Egypt in so doing. After the three years England is to have the superintendence of the Egyptian army and military arrangements during a further period of two years. There is nothing in the Convention to prevent the Khedive from retaining the British officers now serving with it, or from engaging others. The fifth provides that all the powers will be requested to give their adhesion to all the principles of an international character adopted in this Convention, and to sign an Act guaranteeing the inviolability of Egyptian territory, except in case of disorders, or of danger of foreign intervention after the evacuation, in which case English and Turkish troops alone will have the right to intervene, jointly or separately. The sixth provides various modifications to be introduced into the Capitulations, the principal one giving criminal jurisdiction to the reformed courts. It is not proposed to abolish the Capitulations absolutely, but there is an understanding that the international tribunals shall have extended authority in criminal cases. This article further deals with the tribunals, the Press, and matters of quarantine. The seventh relates to the date of the ratification. Outside the Convention there will be a supplementary document by which the European Powers will be invited to inquire into the desirability of introducing an equilibrium into the receipts and expenditure of Egypt, and of adopting measures to facilitate such equilibrium.

THE NEW JUBILEE COIN.

A Royal proclamation has been issued ordering a new coin. It is called a double florin, and will pass and be received as current and lawful money in the United Kingdom and Ireland at the rate of four shillings. The proclamation takes effect from May 13. The order also defines the impressions of five pounds and two pound pieces, and the other coins now in circulation. With the exception of the new double florin and the modernised "effigy" of the Queen, there is nothing very novel about the coins described in the proclamation. The five-pound piece simply follows the schedule to the Coinage Act of 1870, and is not a new coin. Its raison d'être is not very clear, for its currency is only nominal, and only a very small number are minted. The same may be said of the two-pound piece. For obvious reasons the actual designs of the new coinage are kept secret, and nothing can be stated yet as to the precise time when the issue will be made, or the amount of the issue. The intrinsic value of the coins will be exactly as prescribed in the Coinage Act. One or two of the alterations of design may be mentioned. The inscription on the obverse of the present sovereign (encircling the effigy) is "Victoria D: G: Britanniar: Reg: F: D:." On the new one it will be "Victoria D. G. Britt.: Reg: F: D:." The St. George and the dragon on the reverse is retained. The inscriptions on the half-sovereign are unaltered, except that the date is transferred from the obverse to the reverse.

Considerable changes are made in the half-crown. The date is placed on the reverse instead of the obverse, and instead of the "ensigns armorial of the United Kingdom," being surrounded by a wreath, they are to be "contained in a plain shield surrounded by the Garter, bearing the motto 'Honi soit qui mal y pense,' and the collar of the Garter bearing the inscription on the reverse of the present half-crown, 'Britanniarum Regina Fid. Def.'" The florin will also be greatly altered. The general design of the present coin, which has never been much admired, will disappear. The obverse will be the same as the half-crown. There will still be the crosswise arrangement of shields; but instead of "One florin, one-tenth of a pound," the inscription will simply be "Brit. Reg. Fid. Def." The date will be in Arabic instead of Roman numerals. The new shilling will be like the new half-crown, except that it will not bear the collar of the Garter. The present reverse design is simply an oak wreath and a palm wreath, joined at the top by a crown, encircling the words "One Shilling." The "One Shilling" will give place to the "ensigns armorial," and the wreaths will give place to the Garter. The sixpence will be the same as the shilling. One important point is that none of the new coins above the fourpenny-piece will bear that denomination of value; on the fourpenny-piece and smaller coins it will be expressed by a figure. The new double florin will be exactly four times the weight and intrinsic value of a shilling, and the design will be the same as that of the new florin. The characteristics of each group of coins will be as follows:—Of the £5 piece, £2 piece, sovereign, and crown: The St. George and the dragon. Of the half-sovereign: The arms of the United Kingdom on a garnished shield. Of the half-crown, shilling, and sixpence: The arms of the United Kingdom surrounded with the Garter and Garter-motto. (The half-crown will also have the Garter collar.) Of the double florin and florin: The crosswise arrangement of the four shields. Of the 4d. and smaller silver coins: The value expressed by a large figure encircled by an oak wreath.

THE EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the East India Association, an organisation of Anglo-Indians and Native gentlemen, established in London and Bombay "for the disinterested and independent advocacy and promotion, by all legitimate means, of the public interests and welfare of the inhabitants of India generally," was held on Monday, May 23rd, in the Westminster Town Hall, Sir Richard Temple, M.P., G.O.S.I., presiding. The report of the Council for the past year showed that the objects of the Association had been carried on steadily with a view to increasing its usefulness and influence, unswayed by the influences of political parties in this country or class feeling in India. Many of the suggestions made by the Association, and the principles advocated by it from time to time, have received the approval of the governing authorities, and have been wholly or partially accepted in the conduct of Indian affairs. Sir Richard Temple, M.P., was re-elected President of the Association; and among the Vice-Presidents, the Marquis of Ripon, the Marquis of Tweeddale, the Bishop of Durham, Lord Harris, Lord Randolph Churchill, M.P., Lord Stanley of Alderley, Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., Sir George Balfour, M.P., Sir James Ferguson, M.P., Sir Arthur Cotton, General Scott, his Excellency Ragoonath Row, and the Nawab of Joonaghur; together with a large Administrative Council, comprising about thirty gentlemen who have served in India in various capacities, and who take an active personal interest in the prosperity and good government of that portion of the British Empire. General Sir Orfeur Cavenagh, K.C.S.I., is Chairman of this latter body, and General R. M. Macdonald Vice-Chairman.

MARRIED BY COMPULSION.—A MALE RUKHMIBAI.—At the Calcutta Police Court, very recently, a pleader, on behalf of a Native youth, applied for a process of the Court against his client's father-in-law, who, he said, had kept the young man in wrongful confinement, and forced him into a marriage with his daughter. The complainant, in reply to the Court, said that he was sixteen years of age, his father was dead, and he was living with his mother. A few days ago his would-be brother-in-law came to him with a message that the latter's father wanted to see him. He went to the house, when he was informed that they wished him to marry the old gentleman's daughter. He refused, saying that his mother would be offended at his taking such a step without her consent. On this he was not permitted to leave the house, and was subsequently informed that his mother had given her consent to the marriage, and notwithstanding his unwillingness, he was forced into marrying the daughter, after which he was allowed to leave the house. On going home and telling his mother what had taken place, she remonstrated with him for marrying as he had done, and he now sought the relief of the Court. His Worship asked the young man if he had seen his wife, and knew what washerage. He replied he had seen her, and that her age was fourteen years. The pleader here stated that, the girl being so old, the marriage was against the Hindoo custom, and she having attained the age of puberty the young man had lost his caste by being forced into a marriage with her. His Worship observed that the matter was one for a civil court, and he did not see how he could help the young man, who, he observed, ought to be happy now that he had got a wife. If he had lost his caste it was a case for a civil suit, and not a matter which he could decide upon. The pleader urged that the young man was too poor to pay the expenses of a civil suit; to which his Worship replied that he could not see how he could assist him in a matter which was entirely out of his jurisdiction.—Indian Daily News.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

AND

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service news, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 6, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 20th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 18th May; and from Calcutta to the 17th May.

NUMEROUS exaggerated reports have come across the frontier from Afghanistan during the past week, but little reliable news has been received.

It is reported that General Ghulam Haidar Orakzai is on his way from Mukur to join Sikundar Khan in the Maruf district, and that Durani levies have been sent as reinforcements towards Khelat-i-Ghilzai.

THE AMEER has issued a proclamation declaring all the Hotaks, Tarakhis, and other tribesmen who are in rebellion to be outlaws.

FROM Kandahar the news comes that the garrison there has been more than usually alert during the last few days. The cause of this is the belief that the Hotak Ghilzais are preparing to make an attack on Sikander Khan, who has now remained inactive so long.

LATEST advices from Kabul show that matters are yet at a standstill, and that so far from the Amir's capital being denuded of troops there are still a large body of men massed there.

It is announced that measures are being taken by Mr. Crosthwaite, with the full accord of the Government of India, with a view to placing the administration of Upper Burma on a sounder basis.

THE success of the Indian police in Barma is so decided, that tranquillity reigns in the districts which they control. Their fighting capacity furthermore is said to be practically equal to that of the regular sepoy.

THE 1,200 men enrolled in the Burma police will be sent to their duty next month; of the total number 450 men belong to Bombay.

It is proposed to establish a military scholarship in England, and award a gold medal yearly to Native soldiers as a memorial to the late Sir Charles MacGregor.

PLANS and estimates for the Madras and Paumben Branch of the South Indian Railway have been submitted to the Government of Madras for approval.

SUCH progress has been made with the preliminaries for the new Jubilee waterworks at Jammu that operations will shortly be commenced.

As the Sukkur Bridge is not likely to be completed for two years or more, the question of increasing the steam ferry accommodation at the crossings over the Indus is under consideration. Increase of ferrying power would greatly facilitate the massing of an army corps in Peshin and furnishing it with supplies.

MAJOR W. SHEPHERD has been appointed Consulting Engineer to the Indian-Midland and Bengal-Nagpore Railway Companies.

THE opium revenue for the current financial year from two sales of Bengal opium and one month's pass duty on opium exported from Bombay is at present Rs. 9,97,000 below the estimate, the deficiency in Bengal being Rs. 1,79,350, and in Bombay, Rs. 8,17,650.

It is stated that the three-and-a-half crores in silver coin, which the Gwalior durbar is lending to the Government of India as part of the annual Public Works Loan, will be minted at Calcutta during the next three months.

SIR STEUART BAYLEY unveiled the portrait of Sir Rivers Thompson in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on May 19.

THE COUNTESS OF DUFFERIN's Jubilee Fund now amounts to over a lakh-and-a-half.

THE Punjab Jubilee Fund now reaches a total of nearly half a lakh.

AN address from the Municipality and residents of Simla is now being signed for presentation to the Queen on Her Majesty's Jubilee in England.

MR. A. G. MALLOCK, an officer of the Indian Marine, has met with a fatal accident at Gogha by the capsizing of a boat.

MR. WALLACE, District Superintendent of Police at Meerut, died on Monday night from the effects of the fall which he sustained while pig-sticking on the previous Saturday.

A MAN named James A. Cockburn, alias Morton, who until recently was manager of an indigo plantation in Bengal, has been placed before the Chief Presidency Magistrate for a series of impudent frauds at Bombay.

THE actual amount of salt revenue realised in this country during the last financial year was Rs. 6,33,62,000 on 33,206,000 maunds as compared with Rs. 6,01,22,000 on 31,204,000 maunds in the year 1885-86.

MR. JUSTICE STRAIGHT, of the Allahabad High Court, will not take leave this year.

It has been practically decided that the Cantonment Magistracies are in future to be five-year appointments.

The first of the Tuesday departures of the P. and O. steamers from Bombay commenced from Tuesday, the 24th May.

THE annual cost to the State of the ecclesiastical establishment at Pondicherry is only 25,000 francs. No very large saving will, therefore, be effected by the disestablishment of the Roman Catholic Church.

MAJOR LYONS, of the Ordnance Department, has been severely mauled by a tiger at the Karlee Caves.

A SERIES of Resolutions have been issued expounding the educational policy of the Bombay Government.

A GREAT forest fire has been raging for several days near Kabuta, fifteen miles south of Murree. About ten thousand acres have already been denuded.

SHAIK MEHR ALI, a leading Mahomedan of Hoshiarpore, who had been sentenced to death, and whose property had been ordered to be confiscated for complicity in the recent riots at that place, has been acquitted by the Punjab Chief Court on the ground that the evidence for the prosecution was untrustworthy.

THE Bolan Railway has, says the Indian Engineer, for 120 miles been opened over the Pass, and is now being utilised by passengers from Kindli to Quetta, i.e., for about 80 miles, although the traffic so far is not very great, as the majority of the hill tribes still prefer making the journey on foot, which takes about as many days as it would hours by rail. At Hirokh, which is 4,500 feet above sea-level, the broad gauge ends, and nine miles of narrow gauge ghat-line continues over the summit of Pass, at an elevation of 5,600 feet above sea-level; at this point the line again changes into broad gauge for twenty-five miles, terminating at Quetta. The next changing station is called the "Kotal." It is noted that the narrow gauge will be converted into broad gauge, which alteration would occupy the better part of a year, cost about fifteen lakhs, and would necessitate the rails of the steep parts, say three miles, being fitted with the rack-rail for special cog-wheel engines. It is to be regretted that the expenses for construction amounted to double of what the line might have been laid down for.

Notes of the Week.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF CONNAUGHT arrived at Suez, en route to London, per P. and O. steamer Sutlej, on Saturday morning.

THE settlement of the Afghan frontier still lags. Our Boundary Commissioner, Sir West Ridgeway, returned from St. Petersburg on Saturday evening.

THE Russian newspapers, at least those which are supposed to be officially inspired, pretend to a dread of England annexing Afghanistan, and English editors, frightened by this scare, have penned articles on the subject of what may happen if such annexation takes place. The idea is too utterly foolish, but a serious reply is out of the question. King Solomon advised two ways of answering fools, one of which was to answer them according to their folly, and this seems to be the only way in which it is possible to reply to those Russophobists who are perpetually telling us that India is in immediate danger from a Russian, or an Afghan and Russian, invasion.

THE way in which Russia and her English friends keeps up this row upon the side of England is clever as well as amusing. Does any Englishman who has visited India think of what it would cost Russia to attempt even a hostile movement towards our frontiers? Orators and writers speak and pen warnings very glibly, but they seem to forget or to ignore the tremendous difficulties in the way of carrying out that supposed easy and practical scheme—the invasion of British India by Russia.

It will be the most difficult nut that Russia ever attempted to crack. Granted all her ambition, granted her myriads of men, and granted (what is not so easy to grant) that she can find the funds for the enterprise, she will still have a tough job before her ere she reaches the frontiers of India, there to encounter the phalanx of armed men—English, Punjabi, Sikh, Goorkha, and Pathan—prepared to meet her with all the latest appliances of battle and arms of precision. Why should Englishmen fear the result? We are not Englishmen if we do.

THE question has been asked privately to the editor of this paper whether he advocates a policy of standing still with arms folded, and waiting upon Providence should Russia attempt a hostile advance across Afghan borders? Certainly not. But what we do not advocate is to take the initiative in a hostile movement ourselves. The Afghans have no love for foreigners, and another movement by us into their country—unless it be to repel an invader—will be held to be a movement hostile to their independence. If Afghanistan was a strong and united kingdom we could deal easier diplomatically with it; but as it stands now, a bundle of contending interests and factions, every action on our part is liable to be misunderstood. Surely our wisest policy is that which would leave the mischief-making in Afghanistan to Russia—allowing her if she pleases to invade and stir up strife, and reserving to ourselves the privilege, if it may so be called, of enlisting the Afghans upon our side as allies against the common foe?

It is too late now to talk of throwing a British garrison into Herat. We have, to use a Transatlantic phrase, "allowed things to slide," and must abide the consequences. But holding Quetta and commanding Candahar as we do, why should we be afraid? That Russia will intrigue and do all that wily diplomacy can to weaken our influence in Central Asia is certain enough, but why despair of the influence of our diplomatic arts and of the strength of our arms? In olden days the Roman who despaired of his country was condemned as a traitor. Have we Englishmen, who boast of having accepted all that was best in Roman characters, lost this Roman heritage?

WE beg to commend the following from the Pioneer to the notice of our Russophobist friends who will insist upon it that Russia is playing "the very mischief" with our prestige in the East, and has gained Afghanistan sympathies against us:—

M. Vambéry is an advocate whose zeal injures the cause he espouses. According to his latest utterance he sees Russian emissaries behind every bush and stone in the Ghilzai country, and is apparently prepared also to place his finger upon secret agents of the Czar in the chief bazaars of Upper India. We have repeatedly stated that there is ample evidence to show that the Amir has only to thank himself for the rebellion which has broken out in Eastern Afghanistan: excessive taxation which he has imposed upon his subjects and his tyrannical mode of governing them have been the mainspring of the revolt. So far from the Ghilzais having been incited to rebellion by Russia with a view to injuring English interests in Afghanistan, they themselves have appealed to our officers to help them in their struggle, and have expressed an earnest desire to serve us in return. Russia has undoubtedly intrigued actively at Herat, and is working secretly now among the non-Afghan races north of the Hindu Kush, but her agents would receive but a sorry welcome among the warlike tribesmen across our frontier, whose patriotism is of the fanatical kind, and who well know what the action of the Czar's troops has been among the nomads of Central Asia.

It was not likely that the letters and comments which have appeared in the public Press concerning the loss of the Tasmania would be allowed to pass unnoticed by the authorities who govern the great and admirably conducted steamship company, known to and favoured by all Anglo-Indians as the P. and O. At the ninety-third half-yearly meeting of the company, held at the offices on Wednesday last, the Chairman, Mr. Thomas Sutherland, M.P., took credit (very properly) on behalf of the Company, for the singular immunity which it had enjoyed as a safe and sure navigating concern, and he very warmly defended the good name of Captain Perrine, the commander of the Tasmania, who lost his life shortly after the vessel struck.

BUT there was one part of Mr. Sutherland's address which could not have fallen pleasantly on English ears, and it was this:—

The Tasmania had on board a crew altogether of 55 Europeans and 99 Asiatics, and why did we adopt Natives when we first began to run ships through the Suez Canal instead of Europeans? Because I tell you that when our ships first began to use the Suez Canal we sent them to India solely manned by Europeans, but we were obliged to drop this system, owing to the continuance of misconduct on the part of the European seamen and firemen. It was not an uncommon thing for ships conveying the mails to India to find that before they reached the end of their voyage to Bombay or Calcutta a considerable portion of the crew in jail at the different ports stopped at, and we found that the discipline, cleanliness, and order on board our ships, and the quality of our service was rapidly deteriorating. It was for that reason, and for that reason alone, that we were obliged to use Asiatics in latitudes in which they would be of more service than Europeans.

It will certainly be new and unwelcome intelligence to many travellers that a respectable number of English sailors could not be found for the P. and O. steamers to save the quality of the service from rapidly deteriorating—with regard to cleanliness, discipline, and order. Such a condemnation is not likely to go unchallenged, but as the whole question of responsibility and management, so far as the Tasmania is concerned, is still sub judice, we refrain from further comment. Mr. Sutherland's address will, however, certainly provoke public comment sooner or later. It was bold, but certainly straightforward.

THE regimental dinner of the Bombay Artillery was held at the Grand Hotel on Thursday evening, when the following gentlemen were present:—Colonel Thos. W. Hicks, president; Generals Aitken and Hatch; Major-Generals Gaye, Hill, Wallace, Shekleton, Conybeare, Maxtone Murray, Leishman, Ritchie, Harcourt Finch, Denis de Vitre, and Hailes; Lieut.-Generals Fuller, Wray, C.R., Wargar, Bayley, and Petrie, C.B.; Colonels Hoskins, Heathorne, Blunt, Theobald, Ouchterlony, Y. Le Cocq, Woodward, and F. Lodge; Lieut.-Colonels J. B. Hardy, E. S. Beamish, and Sandham; Majors Strutt, Graham, Edwards, and John Lumsdaine, E-q.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

(Times Correspondents.)
INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 5.

It is now unhappily certain that at least two vessels—the Sir John Lawrence and the tug Retriever—were lost in the recent cyclone. It was hoped for a time that the former might have weathered the storm; but the fact that one of the steamers sent in search came across a number of bodies—chiefly of Native females—and the chest belonging to the captain has put an end to all hope. The calamity is one of the most terrible ever recorded. There were 730 passengers on board, most of them Native ladies, going to Poori to celebrate the Rath Jatra festival at the temple of Juggernaut. The event has cast gloom over the Hindoo community at Calcutta. It is stated that there are few families of any position which had not members or friends among the pilgrims. It is believed that not a soul escaped of those on the Sir John Lawrence, and only one of the Retriever's crew is saved—a Native fireman, who, after clinging to a spar in the water for seventeen hours, was picked up by the steamer Nagpur. He reports that the tug struggled with the storm for some hours, and then foundered. The ship Godiva, which was being towed to sea by the Retriever, and was cast off when the storm burst, was at first believed to have been lost, but she was driven ashore, and has now been got off, and brought back to Calcutta for repairs. Her boats, bulwarks, and everything on deck were swept away, and her cargo shifted, but no lives were lost, and the ship is not materially damaged. Of the two lightships which were missing, one has returned to her station without injury; the other was carried by the storm-wave over a succession of shoals, and is now left high and dry in a position whence it will be difficult, if not impossible, to extricate her. The mate of the latter was drowned while trying to swim ashore.

Houses were blown down, and there was a considerable loss of property at Balsore, and elsewhere along the Orissa coast; but notwithstanding the intensity of the storm, the damage done on land appears to be less than that caused by the cyclone of September, 1885. The Viceroy has telegraphed to the Sheriff of Calcutta expressing the regret and sympathy felt by himself and the members of the Government. It is to be hoped that this sympathy will take the practical form of the authorising an extension of the telegraph to the Andamans and Diamond Island. The latter locality is now recognised as the birthplace of cyclones, and the importance of getting early intimation of their approach cannot be over-estimated.

The Governor of Bombay has administered a severe and altogether unnecessary rebuke to the non-official community of that city. Some weeks ago the senior police magistrate of Bombay went home on furlough, and it was supposed that a certain barrister who had acted for him on several previous occasions would be again appointed to act. The Government, however, conferred the acting appointment on Mr. Crawley-Bovey, of the Civil Service, a gentleman whose whole Indian career had been spent in up country districts. Thereupon 2,300 inhabitants of Bombay, including all the leading European and Native citizens, signed a memorial to the Governor, dwelling upon the qualifications of the barrister who had been passed over, and pointing out that the duties of the city magistracy required an intimate knowledge of many local Acts and customs, as well as of mercantile and shipping law and training, and that this experience was altogether different from that of a magistrate in the provinces. The memorial was most moderately worded; but the Governor has unfortunately shown clear signs of temper in answering it, and couched his reply in acrimonious language. He tells the memorialists that it is not usual to address to the Government criticisms on appointments, or to dictate the name of the person whose nomination the public would prefer. He describes the memorial as the outcome of local or class prejudices against the Civil Service, which he can only attribute to ignorance of the important duties which civilians have to perform. He considers that the appointment made by him is preferable to that suggested, and he flatly refuses to cancel it, or to forward the memorial to the Secretary of State. This answer appears to have given grave and general offence in Bombay; and whatever be thought of the original appointment, there can be no doubt that the citizens of Bombay are fully justified in resenting the tone of Lord Reay's reply to the memorial.

A meeting of gentlemen interested in the tea industry was held at Calcutta last week, for the purpose of considering the steps to be taken for pushing the consumption of tea in this country. It is well known that Natives of all classes have a great liking for tea; and having regard to the enormous quantity now produced in India, and the low prices it has reached, it seems strange that about 2,000,000lb. yearly should be imported from China. It was resolved to found a company, which the tea-planters and agents should be invited to join. The shares are to be ten rupees each, and no one is to hold more than 100 shares. The object of the company will be to buy up the lower grade of tea at an average price of eight annas per pound. It will then be made up into one-ounce, half-ounce, and quarter-ounce packets, and the company will try to get the Native village shopkeepers to sell the packets at twelve annas per pound, allowing them a commission for their trouble. The gentlemen present seemed sanguine of success, and, as the company's object is rather to benefit the Indian tea industry generally than to make a profit for itself, the Indian planters will watch the venture with interest.

The Indian Government has issued a resolution thanking the members of the late Finance Committee, and stating that its inquiries have resulted in an increase of over fifty lakhs in the Imperial revenue. The Committee's report is at present held confidential; but it will be published when the views of the Secretary of State have been obtained.

The Guicowar and the Maharanees of Baroda left Bombay for Europe last Tuesday. Before going to England they will probably make a short stay in Switzerland for the Guicowar's health, which has been tried by overwork. He laid the foundation-stone of a new market for the city of Baroda a few days before his departure.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

AFGHANISTAN AND THE EMPIRE.

(Bombay Gazette.)

At the present moment, when the news from Afghanistan is eagerly read with the fear lest some disaster to the Amir's troops may commit us to military operations beyond our advanced frontier, it is very desirable to form a correct analysis of the various elements which combine to produce the most serious of our frontier problems. A very reasonable book of modest proportions has just been published by Sir George Campbell, whose reputation as a member of the House of Commons must not be taken as the measure of the high qualities which gained for him a foremost place in the ranks of the statesmen nurtured in India. The title of the book is "The British Empire," and it brings into a focus the many questions which a survey of the possessions of the British Crown, with their resources and the difficulties arising from the multifarious character of their inter-relations, present to the consideration of those who have at heart the maintenance of the Empire in security and peace. We will at present deal only with a portion of the one considerable chapter which applies to India, merely premising that in the general view of the British Empire which Sir George Campbell takes, it is recognised that in the British Islands and in India are concentrated the greatest part of its population, its strength and its resources. There can be no controversy as to the accuracy of this estimate of the political facts, however unwelcome it may be to Australian colonists, who believe that Melbourne is heir-apparent to London, and will yet be the centre of the universe. Sir George Campbell tabulates the irresistible statistics which show that the British Islands have a population of thirty-six millions, who have a complete control over the two hundred and fifty millions of India. The white colonies, over most of whom the British Isles have no control, have a population of eight millions, while the colonies who are mainly inhabited by coloured races have a population of over nine millions, over whom the British Isles exercise an imperfect control. To put it in another way, the British Isles and India have a population of two hundred and eighty-six millions, while the colonies have seventeen millions, of whom scarcely half are of European blood. It is as well to get hold of this great factor in the Imperial problem when discussing questions of Imperial federation, which always exclude from the calculation the existence within the British Empire the Indian Empire with its population of two hundred and fifty millions, and its revenue of seventy millions sterling, and organised politically and militarily on the lines of despotic monarchies. This is an Imperium in Imperio, of which history has given no other example. Now let us see what is the nature of the problem awaiting solution on the North-West frontier of India, where presumably a great European Power intends to strike, if an opportunity offers, a blow which will divert the attention of England from the Dardanelles.

The Afghans—is the Persian term the people who call themselves Pathans—occupy, according to Sir George Campbell's view, only a very small part of Afghanistan, and are alleged to hold, as pertaining to the kingdom of Cabul, a distant and difficult country inhabited by non-Afghan races, whom they regard very much as a man does the wolf whom he holds by the ears. The Pathans—the so called Afghan race—inhabit the whole country from the Indus to Cabul, Ghuznee, and Kandahar. The Hindu Khoosh is inhabited by a different race; and this is true also of the country northward and on to the hills beyond Herat. The Turkish tribes beyond the Hindu Khoosh are in no sense Pathan. The best part of the true Afghanistan forms no part of the dominions of the Prince who rules at Cabul. It is British territory north of the Indus, including the Peshawur Valley. The Pathan population under our rule numbers one million six hundred thousand, and they inhabit the very garden of the old Afghanistan. It was wrested from the Amir, not by the British, but by Runjeet Singh, who held it by a precarious tenure which was not of itself likely to endure very long. After the Sikh war, however, the Afghan provinces which had been occupied by Runjeet were annexed with the Punjab, and were lost to the Amirs for good. The Peshawur Valley, with its fertile soil and a population of six hundred thousand; the Kohat and Banno Valleys, with a population of half-a-million, were gone for ever. Runjeet had entrusted the administration to an Afghan Prince, garrisoning the country with a force under General Avitabile, and it was held as a pledge which might have been redeemed at some time or other. The irretrievable loss of the richest part of the country, with a million and a-half of well-affected Pathans, changed the whole face of things for the ruling dynasty at Cabul. Without the support, financial and military, derived from the country towards the Indus, they had to hold Herat and Afghan Turkestan, which could never be held in absolute subjection by force of arms and of money drawn from the southern Pathan country. The Russian frontier is now continuous with these exposed and remote provinces, and we have bound ourselves to co-operate with the Ameer in the task of resisting an invasion on that side. It must be confessed that the obligation is somewhat onerous, when looked at from this point of view. We have, as Sir George Campbell ~~well says, not a monstrous~~ ^{is somewhat onerous} candle out of the Amir's dominions and made his gadi at Cabul a bed of thorns. Sir George Campbell adduces as an instance of the difficulty we experience in understanding that there may be points of view differing from our own, that we have never realised the feelings of the Amirs in regard to our annexation of the only fertile valleys of Afghanistan. He goes further, and argues that true policy would have counselled us, when we annexed the Punjab, to give back the trans-Indus provinces to the Cabul ruler. We should thus, he says, have rid ourselves of a most troublesome and unpaying task; we could have made the Amir responsible for the protection of the frontier from the hill tribes, and we could have kept him completely in order when we had in those provinces a pledge of his good behaviour which could have been forfeited without sending armies at great cost and risk to Cabul and Kandahar. In effect, says Sir George, we are now in the position of administering those trans-Indus provinces at our own cost, while we hand over to the Amir their revenues as a subsidy to enable him to hold his own against his unwilling subjects in the non-Afghan portion of the dominions we have left him. We hold the Afghan territories which would enable him to make head against the Russians in the province which he now holds at their mercy; and so much bad blood prevails that, although he is our ally, he does not avail himself of the assistance which we have agreed to give him when he asks for it.

This is telling criticism, but it comes a little too late in the year 1887 to be of much practical use. Would Sir George Campbell seriously counsel the Government of India to cede the Peshawur and the other Afghan valleys to Abdur Rahman in order to strengthen his hands in holding the Russians at bay in the provinces north of the Hindoo Khoosh? Such a proposal will not be made even by the Calcutta publicist who arraigns the policy which annexed the Punjab and left Dhuleep Singh no alternative but confide his woes to M. Katkoff. Nevertheless, this suggestion in regard to what might have been had the Afghan valleys been restored to the Amir upon the conquest of the Punjab enables the mind to grasp with more clearness the nature of the difficulties now to be confronted. The Afghanistan with which we are in alliance is only in a diplomatic sense the real Afghanistan; it is composed mainly of the outlying provinces of what was once a more homogeneous kingdom. The Amir is a man of great ability, and he has hitherto wielded his sword very successfully to maintain his authority. If this Ghilzai rising prove too strong for his waning popularity and failing health, we shall be obliged either to sustain him by force of arms, or to leave him to his own resources and see whether a stronger man succeeds in ousting him. It has never been stated in any official or authoritative form, so far as we are aware, that the Government of India would keep him on the throne by direct intervention. The obligation incurred is to support him against foreign aggression so long as his foreign relations are conducted according to the advice of the Government of India. If the Russians interfere in the domestic affairs of Afghanistan it will be necessary to say "hands off." But Russia is a wary Power, and seldom precipitates events. She will probably wait and see what happens; and it is a quite conceivable policy that we should do the same. In the matter of helping one's allies it is sometimes the case, that "they also serve who only stand and wait;" a political truth which was present to Lord Palmerston's mind when he spoke so loftily of the value of judicious bottle-holding.

THE DIFFICULTIES IN AFGHANISTAN.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Even if the Amir temporarily triumphs over his enemies, the Government of India will need to act with great care and caution, to prevent our being prematurely involved. Our recent policy towards the Amir is already misunderstood to a certain extent by the Afghans. Diplomatic complications are beyond their ken; and jumping from simple facts to broad conclusions, they have adopted very exaggerated ideas of the Amir's relations with us. There is an idea abroad in Afghanistan, that Abdur Rahman has only to ask Lord Dufferin for assistance in troops, as well as money, to get all that he requires. Where this opinion prevails, a revolt against the Amir becomes practically a defiance to us; and the Afghans have too shrewd a comprehension of our relations with Russia, to make the situation altogether harmless. While hysterical Russophobia is to be always deprecated, we must not forget that Russian and English interests are and always must be actively antagonistic. Russia is compelled to recognise us as a rival in every way and with good reason. We have almost ruined her wheat-trade, and the greater part of the general trade of all her ports is in the hands of British shipowners. We very properly, in our own interests, thwart her wish to get hold of Constantinople; in fact, our interests clash, and, therefore, we cannot wonder at her wishing to injure us in any way she can. The great object of our Afghan policy should, therefore, be to avoid playing into the hands of Russia. To occupy Cabul would, under almost any conceivable circumstances, be simply doing this; though if the Russians should seize Herat and Afghan Turkestan, we might be compelled to take Kandahar. This could easily be done; and once occupied, the place should never be given up, but made secure against all comers; for Peshin is not a district in which a large number of troops could be permanently quartered, even with the help of a railway. The extremes and variations of temperature are so great, too, that it is certain to prove unhealthy

TEA AND ITS PROSPECTS.

"A. B." writing to the Indian Financial Review, says:—The estimated crop for 1887 is not yet authentically issued by the Indian Tea Association, but sufficient has leaked out to show that the crop will probably exceed 1886 in even a greater ratio than that year did the previous. This of necessity points to an enormous supply of common broken teas, and, as prices in London are as low as 5d. per lb. for that quality, it is not a matter of much difficulty to decide what can be expended in the cost of manufacture to produce tea that can sell at such a figure, and show a profit. It stands to reason the entire crop is not low class tea, but it may safely be estimated that 50 per cent. of this year's crop will be; and taking the other half of the crop at an all round price of 8d., which is certainly a handsome allowance, this gives an average of 6½d., which, turned into rupees, about equals 6½ annas. Carrying the calculation still further, to work at a profit, tea on the garden must be made for 4 annas per lb., and allowing one anna per lb. for Calcutta charges, including brokerage, &c., this would still allow of a return of 1½ annas per lb. or Rs. 7-8 per maund.

The annual statement of a private concern situated in the Doorga supplies the following facts:—350 acres under plant gave 2,900 maunds of tea, the average price realised at auction was very nearly 7 annas per lb.; granting it was worked on the basis given above, this shows Rs. 20 per maund, or a profit of Rs. 58,000. Now to make this garden, including machinery, and interest whilst coming into bearing, the actual cost was Rs. 120,000—therefore in what was considered an indifferent year, 1886, a return of nearly 50 per cent. was realised. This is not a solitary instance. It is the result of economical working, and the result of a large outturn reducing the cost of production. There is, however, a large margin between working at a profit or a loss on the basis of such figures, and surely admits of some method being found of so reducing the cost of production in gardens that can only turn out their five maunds per acre, that a profit will ensue. An expert will tell you, and with some force, that the same labour is required for both gardens, whether growing eight or five maunds per acre. Allowing for the sake of argument this contention, yet it seems monstrous if eight maunds can give at seven annas such a large return, a garden that only yields five maunds cannot be worked to a small profit. The investor fixes the value of the five maunds garden, if a limited company, and all the late auction shares were sold at one quarter of their actual value, companies paying three per cent. yielding at that figure twelve per cent. on the price paid. Allowing that your Native establishment cannot be much less on the five maund garden than on the eight maund garden, surely the work of the European establishment cannot be compared on the one to the other, and there arises again the question of amalgamation of small estates and the cost of European supervision. The annual reports are conclusive on this point. Without giving names, one lately issued shows that the Company's establishment, and bonus to Manager and Commission to agents on a garden in Assam, amounted to within 30 per cent. of the sum paid in daily wages to the coolies, the average just over 300 and the outturn 1,900 maunds. Within less than a mile of this same estate is a garden of 400 acres, with a European establishment, equally large for a similar outturn; added together they return 4 per cent. on the present capital, and both at the time of being converted into limited Companies were sweated to the extent of 200 per cent. Will any one contend if these gardens had remained private property, and been worked for the benefit of the original proprietors, such an enormous sum would have been spent on the European establishment of either? How often have efforts been made to amalgamate tea properties for the very purpose of making a saving in this respect, and utilizing the labour in a more general way, and invariably failed what with petty jealousy in the district, as to the planter likely to be sacrificed by the amalgamation, and the same unfortunately in Calcutta with regard to agents, supposing as is often the case, they are under different agents in Calcutta. Are these obstacles to stand in the way because they exist and continue until perforce the gardens are abandoned?

The apathy shown by shareholders in the present state of affairs generally has much to answer for. If they would only rouse themselves and insist on both ends being made to meet, and not accept estimates based on prices being realized for tea that are fallacious, there would now be less of the terrible future, that can only end in lakhs of rupees being sunk and lost for ever. Too much is taken for granted by the complacent shareholders, as long as a return for his money comes in annually, but, even with the more fortunate concerns, any careful shareholder has only to look back old files, and he will find gardens now producing tea at 6 annas that formerly spent 10 annas, and the same old excuse against any reduction. "The Manager advises us the reduction proposed would simply not only endanger future prospects, but very likely your entire property," and yet the same intelligent individual is now turning out the same or larger quantities at half the cost. Why? Because if he will not some one else will very soon be found willing and able to do so. If this is the case and it is too easily proved as regards the past, why do shareholders again listen to the same argument now? So far my strictures have been confined to the European establishment, but not in any way with a view to under-estimate the value of a good Manager. My object has been, and will continue to be, to show not only the possibility, but the absolute necessity of amalgamation with a good head and subordinates—Natives if they can be found fit for the work in preference to Europeans—solely on the score of expenses; but when, as at the present moment, it is becoming in many instances a question of actual existence, one saving clause points to amalgamation, and my next will be written to further this contention, on the basis of the old motto which in addition to the great economy, says "union is strength."

A NOTE ON RETRENCHMENT.

(Indu Prokash.)

In the last number of the Quarterly Journal of the Puna Sarvajanic Sabha, appears an article headed, "A Note on Retrenchment." Modest as its name is, the Note extends over a hundred pages of the journal, and takes a comprehensive view of the whole question. It is evidently from a master-hand, from one who has dived deep into the subject. The Note has the special merit of being not merely destructive in its criticism. It is also constructive. It does not content itself with pointing out the defects of the existing system, but makes specific suggestions, which deserve the best consideration of the Government. The writer considers the strength of only some of the departments, and only the higher branches of those services. Thus he discusses the supervising and higher executive grades as far as the Assistant Collector in the Revenue Department, the like grades in the Public Works Ordinary, in the Medical, Sanitation, and Vaccination Departments, in the Forest Department, in the Postal and the Mint Departments. The details of the subordinate branches of these departments, and the whole strength of other departments, such as the Army, Judicial, Education, Agricultural, Revenue, Survey, Customs, Salt, Abkari, and Opium, and a variety of other small departments, are altogether omitted from consideration. But the suggestions that are made, limited as they are to a few of the departments, will, if accepted, lead to a substantial saving and efficiency of administration.

The writer starts with the caution that the subject of economy of administration should be approached as a measure of permanent reform, as one that is desirable and expedient in the interest of good government, and not merely as being forced by present embarrassments. All temporary economies result often in waste and, in the long run, in increase of expenditure. The writer, on the other hand, insists upon economy being considered as a comprehensive scheme of reform rendered necessary by a change in the circumstances of the country. He enumerates four sets of causes which have led to the present extravagance of expenditure, and argues that these causes having ceased to exist, the expenditure ought to be revised and adjusted to present wants. The causes are, (1) initial difficulties of administrative organisation incidental to the early years of conquest and imperial settlement; (2) special needs of special situations; (3) historic fictions, originating in historic facts and conditions long since past; and (4) mistakes of policy resulting in serious mistakes of plan, involving a large waste of energy and funds. Under the first head of causes, he instances the double machinery of intermediate supervision, of the Revenue Boards and Divisional Commissioners existing in Bengal and elsewhere under the second, the creation of the third Divisional Commissionership in Bombay, due to the Famine of 1875-76; under the third, the Presidential commands, and under the fourth, the military policy, and so forth. In these and other illustrations which are too long to mention here the principles of retrenchment are foreshadowed, which the writer afterwards works out in detail in respect of the departments mentioned above.

In the Revenue Department the writer suggests certain radical reforms which will effect a total saving of £200,289. The supervising branch of the Department should, he suggests, be made uniform in all the provinces, abolishing Revenue Boards and reducing the number of Divisional Commissioners by a redistribution of administrative charges. He is opposed to the abolition of the Commissioners altogether as too radical a measure. By an elaborate comparison of figures of area, population, and revenue, the writer shows that the number of Commissioners in the whole country may safely be reduced from 37 to 27. A similar reduction is shown to be possible in the number of District officers from 180 to 150. A further reform is suggested in stopping the over-recruitment of Covenanted Civilians. There are at present 155 Civilians for 91 posts in Madras, 159 civilians for 84 posts in Bombay, and so on in other provinces. The evils of this over recruitment in laying extra burdens on the exchequer in the shape of the salaries of supernumeraries and compensation for deferred promotion, and in the appropriation of uncovenanted posts by Civilians, are notorious, and if stopped will lead to considerable relief. In the Public Works Ordinary various reductions are shown to be possible, especially in the supervising branches. The Military Public Works expenditure is proposed to be cut down from £1,000,000 to £625,000, and the Civil expenditure from 4'35 millions to £3,515,470. The Military Accounts Department and the Cooper's Hill College are proposed to be abolished, and the rage for æsthetic public buildings curtailed. The Medical, Sanitation and Vaccination departments are proposed to be amalgamated and placed under one chief. The amalgamation will lead to the abolition of many offices, such as the Deputy-Surgeons General, the Sanitary Commissioner and his supervising staff, as well as the vaccinators and vaccinating superintendents. The Forest Department is proposed to be reconstituted with a saving of six lacs per annum. In the Postal Department the abolition of the Presidency Postmasterships will effect a saving of £12,000 a year. In the Mint Department, the Calcutta mint is shown to be working at a loss, and is recommended to be abolished.

BENGAL.

MR. LAL MOHAN GHOSH met with an enthusiastic reception at a meeting of Natives held in the Calcutta Town Hall in honour of his return from England. The people got up and cheered vociferously when he entered the hall, and a band played "See the Conquering Hero comes." An address was presented, and Mr. Lal Mohan Ghose made a speech, in which he expressed the conviction that the Liberals would prove victorious at the next General Election, and that he would gain a seat to represent the interests of India in Parliament.

THE Chief Presidency Magistrate at Calcutta has had occasion to remark, in respect to a prosecution under the Port Rules, that an important body like the Port Commissioners should employ their solicitor to conduct the cases which come up before the Courts. It could not, he thought, be expected that police inspectors, who no doubt make excellent police officers, could also do the duties of the long-robed gentlemen. It was at times a matter of surprise to him how the inspectors conducted cases so well; but it frequently happened that there were points which required the aid of a legal gentleman. Only the day before, Superintendent Robertson had a case for contravention of Port Rules, which had to be adjourned owing to a book being tendered as proof of the time the sun rose, which could not be put in simply because there was nobody to put the facts before the Court, and if his Worship had not allowed the adjournment, there might have been a miscarriage of justice.

THE hearing of the Burdwan adoption case was resumed at the Board of Revenue before Messrs. Halliday and Beames, when the whole of the day was occupied by Mr. Woodroffe in discussing the question of the law of adoption as applicable to the Bardwan Raj family. He stated that the terms proposed by Lala Bun Behary regarding the adoption of his son were rather unusual, and then he read the opinions of some barristers in Calcutta against the legality of such adoption. Next he quoted some extracts from the Punjab records to prove that, in the absence of any special family arrangement, there was no general law which enabled the sons of daughters or sisters to be adopted. He next read certain paragraphs from the wills of the two last Maharajas of Burdwan, Matab Chand and Aftab Chand, and made some remarks upon them. He further said that Aftab Chand, when adopted by Matab Chand, was an only and eldest son, yet, as certain pleaders advised that the adoption was invalid, he made a will for the purpose of confirming it. The opinions of some Lahore Pundits were then put in, and Mr. Woodroffe argued that all the previous adoptions made by the Maharaja's family were invalid, and that the Burdwan Khettries were nothing better than outcasts. Finally a letter from Maharani Surnomoyi to the Dowager Maharani on the question of adoption was put in, when Mr. Evans, for the Maharani, remarked that the pleaders of both these ladies were the same persons.

MADRAS.

THE Accountant-General, Madras, has been informed that the Government of India are prepared to carry out the recommendations of the Finance Committee in respect of the charges in connection with the Nilgiri Railway in the event of the railway being finally arranged for, viz., that any payment that may hereafter have to be made on account of the Nilgiri Railway should be met by a special addition to the Provincial allotment.

Two Native gentlemen of Calicut have formed a company for the construction and working of an extension of the Mysore Railway to Mangalore via the Seriadi Ghat, and to Udipi from Buntwal via Mooda Bridge to Karkal. The Mysore Government has agreed to give the land required for the lines in its territory, free of cost, and an application was made to the Madras Government for land in the South Canara District upon the same terms as land is granted to the Madras Railway. The Government of Madras, however, does not seem to be inclined to listen to the proposal, and has informed the petitioners that their application will be considered after they have submitted the preliminary survey and estimates for the proposed lines.

THOUGH very little good can come out of Cuddapah, it is, however, not the only town where municipal affairs will not bear the light thrown on them by an auditor, or rather by an Inspector of Local Fund Accounts. Another municipality, the examination of whose accounts discloses a certain degree of rottenness, is Calicut. The accounts that came under the review of an Inspector of Local Fund Accounts, recently, were for the year 1885-86. The report discloses the following facts:—The amounts on the counterfoils of receipts granted not seldom differed from those shown in the demand registers. In some cases collections were made twice over. Vouchers were found wanting in certain cases, while in some cases there was nothing to show that the articles were supplied or work done, or that the payee received the amount. Mere applications for sums due are filed in support of payments in place of the payee's receipts. Acknowledgments were not received from the Treasury Officer for sums remitted on account of contributions. Vouchers lack the payee's signature in some cases. There is nothing to show that payments were made (by the overseer) to the scavenging establishments, lamp lighters and sweepers. In some cases of expenditure under works, there is no evidence of check measurement of the work executed or materials furnished by the contractor. As a rule, mere memoranda for work done or articles supplied are sent in under signature of the overseer, payment being made direct by him to the party concerned without any receipt being secured in token of acknowledgment. The above are only some of the irregularities we have noted. The post of chairman for the period under report was filled by Mr. B. C. Leggatt, Treasury Officer, and Mr. P. Kurunakara Menon was manager. The manager resigned and retired into private life in December last year. All that Government have observed in passing orders on the report is, that the accounts of the Calicut Municipality were kept in a very unsatisfactory way, and that the supervision exercised by the late chairman was inadequate. They attribute the slovenly way in which the accounts were kept to the manager's "incompetence or neglect of his duties."

BOMBAY.

H.H. THE MAHARAJA OF IDAR, who is a keen sportsman, has just distinguished himself by killing a tiger. News having been received that a tiger was doing mischief near Silcha, on the Bhiloda Road, some twenty miles from Idar, his Highness repaired to the spot, and gave the brute his quietus before six o'clock in the evening.

A GENERAL meeting of the Catholics of Bombay was recently held in the great hall of St. Xavier's College for the purpose of discussing the steps to be taken towards celebrating the jubilee of the Pontiff's priesthood. Resolutions were carried appointing a collecting committee, consisting of Colonel Sexton, Captain Crowder, Messrs. E. F. Nicholson, Thomas Duncan, F. Macguire, H. Munroe, T. F. Vaz, P. F. Gomes, T. Walsh, F. Leao, and J. F. Fernandez. Details are to be arranged at a subsequent meeting.

THE first of the expected changes in the Sind Encumbered Estates Department has already occurred. Mr. Jenkins, Manager, Sind Encumbered Estates, leaves for Baroda shortly, his services having been temporarily lent to the Gaekwar's Government; and Mr. Steele, of the Sind Commission, has been appointed to officiate for him. Mr. Hart-Davies resigned the managership on the ground that a large number of the estates had been relieved and restored to their owners, and that it was no longer justifiable to entertain the services of a highly-paid manager. The pay of the manager was accordingly reduced, and it was intended to appoint another officer on a lower salary.

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDE, AND PUNJAB.

MR. H. R. HACKMAN, of the Punjab Public Works Department, has died from snake-bite. He had served only three years and a-half in the Public Works Department, and had held the rank of Assistant Engineer of the 1st grade at Dera Ghazi Khan only since last November.

EFFORTS are being made by the Masonic brethren of Simla to institute another lodge in the station, working under the "Scotch Constitution." The application for a "Charter" has been sent to the Right Worshipful the Grand Master in Scotland, and it is intended to keep the lodge open all the year round should it be found that a sufficient number of Masons remain in Simla at the close of the season.

THE Maharaja of Kashmir, accompanied by the two Princes his brothers, reached Srinagar from Jummoo on the 5th of May. The entry was made in State, the Resident going out by boat some miles to meet the Maharaja and accompanying him in, followed by a long procession of State boats, which passed under the seven bridges of the city. For the time there is apparently a lull in the politics of Kashmir, and it is hoped advantage will be taken of this state of things to give more attention to the question of the land revenue settlement.

ANOTHER masterpiece of architectural skill is rapidly nearing completion. The last span of the Ganges Bridge at Benares has been placed in position, and it is now possible to walk across. Although the ceremony of declaring the bridge open for railway traffic will not take place till November, the railway authorities have applied for sanction to permit foot passengers to use the side paths, and thus for the present, and until the breaking in of the rains, keep the bridge of boats exclusively for carriage traffic.

AMONG the prisoners recommended for release as a Jubilee concession, by the Commissioner of Rawalpindi, are one Fazul Khan, a Deputy Inspector of Police, and certain police constables who were convicted last year of torturing an accused person. It seems to the Lahore paper that Fazul Khan and his accomplices are the very last class of prisoners to deserve release on an occasion like the Jubilee:—"For their offence was one which renders the Queen's Government hateful in the eyes of the people, and their release at the time of thanksgiving for Her Majesty's long and kindly reign seems as inappropriate as can well be conceived."

HIS HIGHNESS THE MAHARAJAH arrived on May 5th at Shrinagar. His journey has been a long one. Starting from Jummoo early last month, the route he traversed crosses the Chenab at Aknur, mounts the outer ranges to which it keeps parallel until it meets the Punch river at Kotli; thence two marches to Punch, itself the picturesque capital of Raja Moti Singh; then up the Bitarh river to Kahuta, which is only two days' journey from Gulmarg by a direct path; but the ordinary route then drops over the Haji Pass to Uri and so to Baramulla. In the course of this journey his Highness has seen a good portion of his dominions, contrary, perhaps, to the prevailing idea. A majority of the population of the Kashmir territories live to the south of the snowy range, and speak Dogri, Chibhali or cognate hill dialects. Large numbers of people, especially the local officials, went out to meet him, some going four or five marches, so that with the numerous Europeans, now coming in by the Murree route, Baramulla has sprung suddenly into life and activity.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

SANCTION has been received to raise the new 37th Bengal Infantry Regiment.

SURGEON A. R. EDWARDS has been placed in medical charge of Sheik Budin, the Punjab frontier sanitarium, for the season.

SURGEON W. J. RODGERS, 2nd Sikhs, will officiate for eight months as medical storekeeper, Allahabad, during the absence, on leave, of Surgeon-Major G. Hutcheson.

COLONEL H. M. PRATT, 2nd Sikhs, who recently proceeded on furlough, has been offered a command in the Burma police.

CAPTAIN R. H. DANIELL, 2nd squadron commander 5th Bombay Cavalry, is going home for six months to attend to urgent private affairs.

MAJOR MAYNE, R.A., having proceeded on leave, the command of the Allahabad Fort has devolved on Captain Cassan, R.A.

DURING the absence on privilege leave of Major W. G. C. Halkett, Captain J. W. Hogge, Brigade Major, officiates as Assistant Adjutant-General, Allahabad Division.

CAPTAIN A. W. B. GORDON, A-2nd R.A., has been appointed aide-de-camp to H.E. the Governor in succession to Captain Hamilton. Captain Gordon was already extra aide-de-camp to his Excellency.

BRIGADE-SURGEON CRICKSHANK's retirement has given promotion to Surgeon-Major Hojel, who has now become brigade-surgeon. Similarly, the retirement of Brigade-Surgeons MacDowall and Blanc has given promotion to Surgeon-Major P. T. Turnbull and Surgeon-Major H. Cook.

THE Secretary of State has just sanctioned the new 37th Regiment of Bengal Infantry being composed of Dogras. Colonel Rivaz commands it; Major Sir Charles Leslie, adjutant of the E.I.R. Volunteers, is to be second-in-command, and Captain Mills, adjutant, 2nd Administrative Battalion, N.W.P. Volunteers, wing commander.

THE 34th Pioneers are to be raised at Mian Mir under the same caste constitutions as those laid down for existing Pioneer regiments. Their uniform will be the same as the 32nd Pioneers. The 35th Sikhs, to be raised at Ferozepore, and the 36th Sikhs, at Jullundur, will be composed of Jat Sikhs from north of the Sutlej. The locality and composition of the 37th will be notified later on. The uniform of these regiments will be red, with yellow facings, as in the 14th Sikhs. The 2nd Battalion of the 3rd Gurkhas is to be raised in Garhwal and composed of Garhwalis from Upper Garhwal—a class of men whose merits as soldiers have more than once been emphasised. The uniform and equipment of the Battalion is to be the same as that of the 3rd Gurkhas. Two Subadars and two Jamadars' commissions will be conferred in each regiment on Native gentlemen of good family of the classes required, who bring in one hundred or fifty good men; the higher number securing the senior rank without probation in both cases.

AMIDST the Jubilee designs and ornaments invented by English jewellers the design of Mr. J. N. Master, of Rye, Sussex, holds pre-eminent place. The design consists of a Royal Crown on an open Bible, surrounded by a garter bearing the motto: "Feare God, honour youre Kynge," and having a Royal mace and sceptre placed diagonally across it. The design is Mr. Master's own, and has been registered and retained as a speciality by him.

SERIOUS defalcations have been discovered in the accounts of the Marmagoa Railway Company. It had been suspected for some time that considerable leakages were taking place, but it was only recently that actual knowledge was obtained of the leakages. Mr. Vasey, the engineer, has now found that a pay-clerk, in combination with the time-keepers, has misappropriated a sum of Rs. 14,000. It is expected that an inquiry will show the amount of the speculations to be something over half a lakh.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.*

The British record on the North-Western Frontier of India is one rather of great suffering than of great achievement. For an all but unlimited expenditure, during the past half-century, of men and money, we have, in sooth, but little to show. One can, too, but agree with Sir R. Temple, who occupies the place of honour in this number, that on that side there is "no bright anticipation, no chance of expansion, no germ of development. We stand to our arms, resolved to hold our own; beyond that we expect nothing, we shall indeed be thankful even if we do that much successfully." It is a relief to turn our gaze, and to survey, under the guidance of the able writer, the prospect presented by the opposite, the North Eastern, or, as it is more correctly designated, the Eastern Frontier of India, extended, by the annexation of Upper Burma, to a length of nearly two thousand miles, from Tenasserim in the South to Assam in the North. This line, enclosing "our property in a ring fence," abuts on and includes territories, as yet indeed but scantily peopled, and, therefore, to a great extent wholly uncultivated. But, both within and without the Frontier, "the soil is rich and fertile, the means and resources for human habitation are great and varied. Such habitation," justly observes Sir Richard, "must spread" (at all events within our own territory), "so surely as the Pax Britannica shall be established." Crossing the Red Line, we reach "regions full of prospective advantage for British commerce and for British expansion in every way." These are, Siam, and the enormous extent of the Chinese Empire. Sir R. Temple warmly advocates the early utilisation of our position by a line which, considering how many years Maulmain has been in our possession, might long since have been constructed, and the expediency of making which has been long and urgently pressed (as, the other day, before the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce) by Mr. Holt-Hallett, who has personally explored the entire route. We allude, of course, to the proposed line of 170 miles from Maulmain to Raheng (where it will join the projected Siamese Railway from Raheng to Bangkok) and thence to Ssu-mao (a further distance of 500 miles) "the trading centre of Yunnan." This route, crossing the mountain chains at points where they sink towards the alluvial plain, presents few difficulties of importance compared with the apparently more direct route from Mandalay into China, the object being, in Sir R. Temple's words, "to avoid making a direct assault on engineering difficulties, and rather to turn and outflank them." There is, as the writer points out (p. 449), in concluding his valuable paper, "a grand field for railway enterprise within Burma itself," including the extension of the Mandalay Railway (itself now in rapid progress) to Bhamo, and its ultimate connection with projected lines in the Eastern extremity of the Indian province of Assam.

Nearer home a less satisfactory outlook is shown to exist by Mr. Perry, who directs attention, not a moment too soon, to England's position in the Mediterranean. The obvious advantage which our great naval rival, France, possesses in having (in Toulon) a base of operations in the Mediterranean has hitherto been in a manner neutralised by our possession of Malta, as well as of Gibraltar. But the occupation by France of Tunis gives to her Goletta, called by Charles V. the "key of Africa," situate between our two fortresses, together with "the power to harass every British ship bound to or from Malta and the East" (p. 559). Worse still, it must reluctantly be admitted that, as Mr. Perry conclusively shows, and as Lord R. Churchill authoritatively stated at Wolverhampton last Friday, neither Malta nor Gibraltar are (p. 561) in anything approaching a state of defensibility against a persistent attack from a first-class enemy. This is no time to grudge the expenditure necessary to ensure the absolute safety of both fortresses, as well as that of Cyprus.

Another defective joint in our armour is pointed out by Lord Ribblesdale when, in the course of a well-argued paper on Queen's Plate, he touches (pp. 473-4) on the deficiencies of our horse supply, reminding us that these are not to be rectified by the brute-force expedient of indiscriminate seizure of untrained horses after the outbreak of war, but by timely preparation. "If," he justly says, "the first principle of modern war be rapid mobilisation, the power of rapid mobilisation seems the first principle of modern peace." Yet the artillery-reducing Secretary for War has been constrained to admit the deficiency of horses "even for the initial purposes of war!"

There are few more perplexing problems than those which deal with over-population. What with the natural tendency to obey the prime law, "Be fruitful and multiply," what with an unlimited (and, most short-sightedly, unchecked) immigration of foreign paupers, the congestion in the large cities of Great Britain is a matter causing serious apprehension to every reflecting mind. We may, however, remember, that the primal law above referred to ends, "And replenish the earth." In this direction England has indeed done much, but may do yet more. And to show how this should be done is the object of an instructive article by Lord Brabazon, now the Earl of Meath, on "State-directed Colonization."

* "The National Review." June, 1887. London: W. H. Allen and Co.

We have already expressed our belief that private effort will but touch the fringe of the enormous difficulties which we have to face, and the conclusions at which the noble writer has arrived will commend themselves to most readers.*

The spiritual care of intending, as well as of actual, emigrants is fully as important as that articulus stantis aut cadentis Ecclesie, missions to the heathen. Both are treated with intelligent sympathy in the Rev. F. Arnold's notice of "The Foreign Missions of the Church of England." For missions to the heathen we subscribe £1,300,000 yearly, while "the Roman Propaganda is supposed to raise about one-tenth of what is obtained in Great Britain." In the first-named sum are included the contributions to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, who "have always steadfastly adhered to the original idea, to deal with the plantations and Colonies of the Crown." Their work, scarcely less arduous than that of the Missionary Societies, has been very successful, and eminently deserves the aid of all who are interested in the welfare of our self-expatriated fellow-subjects.

Mr. Sharpe's comparison, or rather contrast, between the Royal Academy and the Parisian Salon, will deservedly attract attention; his remarks on the décadence of art, as of everything ennobling, in France, are lamentably true. While rejoicing at the brilliant future which, as we believe with him, is in store for English pictorial art, it is impossible not to deplore the loss of the healthy rivalry of the French school, from which, however, even in its present flaccid state, we may learn not a little.

Ladies will read with especial interest Dr. Hayman's article ("The Byron Ladies") on the relations between Lady Byron and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Leigh. Regarding the latter, the paper does but add another stone to the tomb of infamy to which Mrs. Beecher Stowe's pretended Revelations have long since been consigned by every reasonable reader.

Mr. Pycroft's reminiscences of Oxford have induced Mr. Kebbel to present us with a very interesting contrast, drawn from his own recollections, between "Old and New Oxford." The paper is pleasantly written, and gives a vivid presentment of the difference between the "half monastic, half patrician, and wholly exclusive" system of former days and the present modernised system, of which the proposal, just, happily, nipped in the bud, to make of the venerable Bodleian a huge lending library, is the last, and assuredly not the least, objectionable exorcism.

WALFORD'S "ANTIQUARIAN."

The June number of Walford's "Antiquarian" (George Redway) is of unusual interest. The paper on the Six Sages of Somerset (among whom is the renowned Roger Bacon, probably the inventor of gunpowder, and certainly the adumbrator, if not the actual inventor, of the telescope) will be welcome to all denizens of that part of the "West Countree," while the short notice on Thorscros, in Yorkshire, affords yet another instance of the assimilating power—if the phrase be permissible—which enabled the Christian Church to adapt heathen superstitions to its own ends.

In quoting, as regards belief in astrology, the oft-repeated canon, "Quod semper, quod ubique, quod ab omnibus," we hope not to be met with the argumentum ad hominem. Nevertheless we must admit that.

"From the West to furthest Ind" mankind looked, in more senses than one, for guidance to the stars. The influence of the heavenly bodies on human life has been an article of faith from the earliest ages. This belief has left its traces, more or less distinct, in almost every language. In English, such words as jovial, martial, mercurial, saturnine, nowadays applied to individual temperaments, originally signified the planets, under the ascension of which the individual had, or was supposed to have, been born. The very word "luck" (= look) at once indicates the necessity of inspecting the conjunctions of the heavenly bodies. "Aude Sapere" might have pursued his subject further with advantage; he has, as he justly remarks, "but touched its fringe."

People do not, as a rule, study their own account books with pleasure. But both pleasure and profit are derivable from the study of other people's accounts, especially if the other people lived in times gone by. From this point of view, "A leaf from an old Account Book" (p. 397) is worth reading. That it was necessary to have special whips to drive dogs out of church, and that the change of prices was such, that such a dog-whip cost 8d. in 1785, and 3s. 2d. in 1809, only a quarter of a century later, will be news to many.

THE INDIAN MAGAZINE.

The Indian Magazine for the Jubilee month contains, as in duty bound, some interesting references to Her Majesty's position in India. Of these Sir G. Birdwood's paper on the Title of Kaiser-i-Hind, setting forth the circumstances which led to the proposal of the Title, and vindicating its appropriateness, will, probably, attract most attention. It will not be readily forgotten that it was on this subject that the present leading advocate of the disruption of the Empire first showed his true colours by objecting to a Title which, so far as India is concerned, symbolised the unity of that Empire.

* Some interesting "Notes on New Zealand," by Mr. Brodie Hoare opportunely call attention to the eminent suitability of those antipodean islands to the demands of those whose only capital is "a stout heart and strong hands" (p. 508).

Mrs. Knight gives us, in a well-written article, a glance at India as it was half-a-century ago, and as it is now. It has been given to few indeed to compare, on the spot, the two periods. But there are a few: and throughout the Anglo-Indian World. The change has indeed been one the ultimate tendencies of which are almost incalculable. The awful cataclysm of 1857 has left traces of evil which are yet far from being obliterated. Whatever of good a Higher Power may be bringing out of the evil is but partially developed. Does the Briton better understand the inner feelings of his Native fellow-subjects? Does the Native better appreciate the Briton? These, it seems to us, are the questions, the answers to which will show us the amount of real progress made by us, in India, in welding it, during the half-century, to the body-corporate of the Empire. Let us consider these questions in a spirit as far removed from a depreciation of what we have brought to pass, as from a confident boasting that we have done everything which it was possible for human beings to carry into effect.

"Their sound has gone forth"

Mr. Banerjee's recapitulation of the result of "Half a Century of Education in India" is both interesting and encouraging. We should be glad to see more attention devoted to the practical—that is, the technical—and less to the ornamental and theoretical, studies, at all events in the lower schools.

We are glad to see that, the Jubilee notwithstanding, the case is not forgotten of one, to whom 1887 may be a very wretched year. It would be true practical loyalty to the sex which Her Majesty has ever ennobled, to divert some stray contributions to aiding Rukhmabai to assert her right to be free from a loathsome marriage tie. Let it be remembered that a favourable decision on her appeal—to the Privy Council if needful—though it will be costly, will be a Jubilee announcement of freedom to millions of her oppressed countrywomen, and our fellow-subjects.

AUSTRALIAN DEFENCES AND NEW GUINEA.*

Of all the problems of the day, so far as this country is concerned, none can compare in importance with the relationship of the Colonies towards the Mother Country. It is evident to the most superficial observer that these possessions must either be a source of immense strength to Great Britain, or a cause of profound danger. In exact proportion as their interests and their welfare are firmly and indissolubly linked with the mighty Empire of which they form a component part, or are but loosely bound up with a kingdom from which they are anxious to be separated at the earliest opportunity, so will the position and power of England increase or diminish amongst the nations of the world. But it is obvious that if the Colonies are to form an appanage of this country they must be protected from attack at the hands of an enemy. It would be impossible to allow them to remain in such a defenceless condition that great and flourishing capitals would be at the mercy of any cruiser which might escape the vigilance of our fleet. Still the problem is not easy of solution, for in new settlements it is not possible to adopt measures such as would be suitable for an old country. Standing armies, huge fortresses, splendid fleets, the latest and finest mechanical inventions—these are very well for England, but not within the limits of possibility as regards Australia.

In these circumstances, Sir Peter Scratchley was deputed some years ago to examine into the matter, and advise the Australian Colonies what to do and how to do it. The results of his mission are embodied in the very interesting and valuable work which Messrs. Macmillan have just issued. It is not contemplated to examine in detail the various measures which he proposed or the reasons which he adduced in support of his suggestions. This must be left to the reader; but we cannot refrain from recording a word of praise in favour of this officer, who seems to have devoted to his task a degree of energy, perseverance, and professional skill which deserve the highest commendation. His premature death is a loss alike to the colonies where he had done such good work as to the profession in which he had served with distinction.

The volume merits careful perusal. It will amply repay the time thus spent, if only in so far as it gives the best account we have seen of England's recent colonial acquisition of New Guinea, an island advantageous rather in a strategical than a commercial point of view, unless civilisation, by clearing the jungle and draining the swamps, should give to the climate that healthiness, without which European enterprise can scarcely make satisfactory headway, or the island become a source of wealth and prosperity.

The Army and Navy Magazine (W. H. Allen and Co.) for June keeps up its well-won reputation. It has a very able paper on "Science for Sailors, or the Mathematician Afloat," and an equally good one on "The best and cheapest system of Artillery defence." M. J. Colquhoun continues his pleasant story of "Every inch a Soldier," and Mathew Fforde contributes a little tale called "A Jubilee Joke," which will well repay perusal. Q. E. F. attacks boldly, but with knowledge, the shortcomings of our Staff and Commissariat Staff which he declares, as at present constituted, to be a source of danger rather than of efficiency. "Surat the Cradle of our Indian Empire," by Rathbone Low, and "The Battle of Beachy Head, 1690," are pleasant bits of old history, containing facts which will be new to many. "Furlough" gives his usual lively account of the month's doings, and thus winds up a very well prepared and edited number.

* "Australian Defences and New Guinea." Compiled from the Papers of the late Sir Peter Scratchley by C. Kinloch Cooke. (Macmillan and Co.)

EXPORT TAX ON THE PRODUCE OF BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—The Times of India has been at last awakened to the impolicy of imposing fetters upon the industry of the Burmese; for many years past, in addition to the land-tax, we have extorted an export duty on rice.

All export duties are vicious, but the export duty on rice at Rangoon is especially silly. We pretend that we wish for the prosperity of Burmese cultivators, but we prevent the natural increase of the cultivation of the staple by a heavy transit-tax.

If the English Press were to take up this subject, the tax would be speedily abolished, and Burma made free to produce enough food for the support of millions of souls who live in countries where rice cannot be cheaply cultivated.

The rice of Burma would speedily take the place of what is now exported from Saigon, Java, Sumatra, and Brazil.

Your obedient servant,

CONNECTING BURMA WITH CHINA BY RAILWAY.

The problem of connecting Burma with China by railway has been discussed exhaustively before the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce by Mr. Holt S. Hallett, who, with Mr. Colquhoun, has done a good deal of exploration in those regions. There is, in Mr. Hallett's opinion, a magnificent field for our commerce if the country is opened up by railways. It is solely owing to the cost of transit that we have at present no trans-frontier trade, either with Siam and the Eastern Shan States, or China, although the sea-borne trade between India and China alone amounts to £13,500,000. The cost of land transport even in China, where labour is cheap, is at least forty-three times what would be the charge for carriage by railway; but notwithstanding this impediment to trade a large through and local traffic exists. The Chinese have offered to connect their telegraph system with that of British Burma at the frontier, and have expressed their intention to push forward the construction of railways as rapidly as their finances will allow; and it only rests with us to take a railway to the Chinese frontier to ensure the Chinese carrying it on through their western provinces, and thus opening up a large inland trade with our seaport of Maulmain, thus greatly benefiting our commerce, as well as that of the two neighbouring empires of India and China. Since our annexation of Burma and its Shan States there are no political obstacles in the way of making this railway. The railway would run solely through British and Siamese territory, and our Minister in Siam has informed our Indian Government that Siam would make the portion of the line from its capital, via Raheng, to our frontier, if we, on our part, would promise to meet it with a line from our seaport of Maulmain. This joint line would form the base for the extension of the line to China through the Siamese and British Shan States. Our Government have as yet taken no action in the matter, and Mr. Hallett is desirous of rousing the mercantile community in order that they may bring pressure to bear upon the authorities.

THE Indian silk industry is now in a fair way to make good progress. The Revenue and Agricultural Department are making a collection of all the various Indian cocoons, which will be sent to Manchester, there to be kept always open to inspection. M. Natalie Rondot of Lyons, an expert who takes a great interest in Indian silk, is helping the Government in the matter of silkworm disease, and infected cocoons are to be sent to France for examination by some of M. Pasteur's pupils. It is hoped that some remedy may thus be found for the disease which has done so much mischief in the silk tracts of Bengal.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

MONDAY, JUNE 6, 1887.

DHULIP SING AND HIS FRIENDS.

THE MAHARAJA DHULIP SINGH has at length gained for himself the notoriety which for some time he has coveted. He is now posing as the avowed enemy of England, and the ally of Russia in any designs which she may entertain against British India. The most absurd rumours have been flying about Europe and the East as to the result of the Maharaja's action. It has been stated that he has only to place himself at the head of an invading force approaching our Indian frontier when it will be the signal for a rising in the Punjab, and when the Sikh soldiery, hitherto faithful to their salt as part of the British army, will desert their colours and unfurl the Khalsa banner in favour of the son of Runjit Sing. Such an idea has, we know, no hold in India itself. The Punjab is thoroughly loyal, and the oldest and most bigoted Sikh there has no sympathy with the aspirations of Dhulip Singh. The Sikhs who fought and suffered under the rule of Runjit Sing had good reasons for doubting Dhulip's legitimacy at the time of his birth, and his recognition as heir to the Lion of the Punjab by the British Government did not go far to reassure them. But with his departure from the country whatever influence his name might have had vanished. His mother, the "Queen of the Silver Voice," had power, and had he been left to her care his presence might have been a danger in the Punjab even to-day. But as events have moved he is now utterly forgotten or unrecognised there. Were he at Lahore to-morrow he would not have a dozen followers, and the Sikh soldiers would laugh to scorn any attempt of his to shake their fidelity to the British officers. We imagine that these facts are known also at the Russian Foreign Office, although it may answer Russian purposes for a time to play the part of host to an Indian prince who is supposed to have been cruelly treated by England. When the day of action comes Dhulip Sing will find out what is the value which Russia places upon his proffered services. He will then regret perhaps the foolish steps which he has lately taken in his wild attempt to frighten the British Government into the idea that he has the power to stir up strife in India.

But allowing all this, it is still a matter for regret that a grave political scandal should exist, into which the good name of British justice should be dragged to its detriment. England has ever been the most generous of conquerors, notwithstanding all charges brought against her to the contrary. Napoleon, in one of his petulant fits at St. Helena, certainly upbraided her for being his jailor, but he did not choose to remember that he willingly placed himself in her custody as being the most merciful of his enemies. In India we have dealt kindly and thoughtfully with fallen foes who fought us openly. If retribution was meted out sternly during the great Mutiny, the excuse must be that which the great Sir Charles Napier pleaded for not sparing an enemy at Meanee: "We were too weak for mercy." But however much pseudo-historians of the humanitarian school may rave about British annexations in India, and British injustice to the former lords of the soil, the true verdict of the future will be in British favour. It is the veriest cant of hypocrisy to declare, as we regret to see certain English writers still doing, that our annexation of Oudh was a crime for which the Mutiny was a fitting punishment, and that the annexation of the Punjab was a theft and a terrible wrong to Dhulip Sing. Whatever evil was done in either case has been more than counterbalanced by the good which has followed. Both possessions are happy and contented Provinces to-day instead of being the plunder preserves of rapacious rulers. The terms made on behalf of Dhulip Singh when he fell into British hands cannot be said to have been dictated in a mean or ungenerous spirit. Whether all the after action was wise is another question. It may be possible to show that the British Government has done all in its power to keep Dhulip Sing loyal and honourable to his engagements, and that the scandal which is now patent to the world is the result of his own headstrong misconduct. But we think that, if this be so, an authoritative statement to that effect should be publicly made. It would not be beneath the dignity of the British Government to do this, and it would serve as a lesson which might be read with advantage by all Indian intriguers and their foreign friends.

A CORRESPONDENT in Afghanistan has sent to the Lahore paper the following roughly translated extract from a letter, which is said to have been sent by the son of Mulla Mushk Alam to the tribesmen at Daur, exciting them to a Jehad against the Ameer of Cabul:—"The present Ameer, Abdul Rahman, Khan of Cabul, is a very tyrannical one. He is aiming at his own self-profit, and not that of his subjects. The Ameer Shere Ali Khan, former Ameer of Cabul, was a merciful man, and was in the habit of looking always after the interests of his subjects. The present Ameer has turned out all our noble families from Cabul, and has killed most of our people without any fault. He has seized and imprisoned our women without any guilt on their part; and besides this act of tyranny, he is a great friend of those who are against our Mahomedan law. So let us simultaneously rise against him, &c. It is proposed that all the tribes shall consult on the matter, and shall act according to the order of their law."

THE P. AND O. COMPANY.

The ninety-third half-yearly meeting of the P. and O. Steam Navigation Company was held on the 1st inst., at the offices, Leadenhall-street.

Mr. Thomas Sutherland, M.P., the chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, expressed his deep regret at the loss which the company had sustained by the wreck of the Tasmania, one of their newest and finest vessels. For that loss no one in that room could be held responsible. It was one of those misfortunes which they must bear in the best way they could, in the hope—the confident hope, he might say—that it was one not likely to occur again for many years. He found, on looking back at the record of the company's insurance fund for the last ten years previous to the accident to the Tasmania, that the total losses suffered by the company would have been covered by a contribution of one-half per cent. on the insurable value (the book value) of their fleet. He thought that all who were acquainted with such matters would admit that that was a record of which the company had had every reason to feel proud. If during the next ten years their record should be no less favourable, they would have great reason to congratulate themselves on being their own insurers, and on a high record of safe navigation—as high as any in the world. There was one circumstance which he felt they ought to be gratified at in connection with this unhappy matter—that although the captain, an officer, and several of the crew perished, not a single passenger's life was lost. It was a highly satisfactory fact to reflect upon that during the long time the company had been in existence they had never yet lost a passenger's life. In connection with the question of the insurance of their ships, he would point out that during the ten years to which he had referred they had had no fewer than forty-five vessels navigating all parts of the globe at an average rate of 2,000,000 miles annually. The disaster to the Tasmania would be inquired into by the properly-constituted authority, and therefore it was no part of his business to try and anticipate, in the slightest degree, the judgment which might be passed as to the cause of the occurrence; but in these cases one generally found that one's friends were ready to assume the most unfavourable judgment against the company and their servants long before an inquiry had been held. For his own part he made very great allowance for the natural feelings of annoyance of those who had been subjected to great peril like the passengers on the Tasmania, but he thought he would not be doing his duty towards the company if he were not to endeavour to set aside some of the statements which had been made about the officers and the ship which he could not but stigmatise as misrepresentations affecting the character of the company's service. Referring in detail to the allegations in question, he stated that Captain Perrins, who had been in command of the vessel, so far from being old and decrepit, was at the time of the disaster fifty-two or fifty-three years of age. Certainly during the whole of the second officer's watch Captain Perrins was himself in charge of the duty of navigating the vessel through the Straits of Bonifacio. At about half-past three A.M. he went to his cabin, and having made out his course to be steered after leaving the Straits, he went on the bridge again to the second officer, gave him the course, in which that officer concurred, and said, "Now that we are free of all danger I shall go below." In half an hour afterwards the vessel struck on the rock. There had been no want of energy on the part of the captain in looking after the ship under his command; and during the twenty years in which Captain Perrins had held command of vessels belonging to the company the directors had had not one single fault to find with him as an officer and a sailor. On board the Tasmania, moreover, there were at the time of the disaster six officers, three or four of whom were actually provided with captain's certificates. With regard to another allegation, it was perfectly true that eight of the native crew, of the engineers' department, did behave badly in this respect—that they took possession of a raft on which they tried to reach the shore, with so little success, however, that seven of them perished in the attempt. But he was not certain that if they had been European firemen it would have necessarily followed that their conduct would have been so very much better; because he had observed the other day that in the collision between the Celtic and the Britannic, in the Atlantic, the European firemen of the Britannic, against the orders of the commander and the officers, were the first to seize on a boat, and to make off from the ship, which was supposed to be in extreme danger. It was not likely that he would for a moment question the superior courage of Europeans; but they had cases on record where European seamen had, on account of anger, refused to man a boat, which duty was then, in obedience to orders, performed by Lascars. It was an utterly erroneous statement that the company employed natives for the sake of economy. As a matter of fact the crews of the company's ships were composed, taking all hands into account, of about two-thirds of natives and one-third of Europeans; and the Tasmania had on board a crew altogether of fifty-five Europeans and of ninety-nine Asiatics. When their ships first began to use the Suez Canal they were manned exclusively by Europeans, and they had been obliged to employ natives solely on account of the continued misconduct of European seamen and firemen, from which circumstance they had found the quality of the company's service deteriorating. For that reason alone they had found it necessary to employ Indian seamen, in latitudes in which it had appeared to the directors Indian seamen would after all do more valuable service than Europeans. As to the statement about the delicacy and weakness of the Indians and their inability to live in cold climates, not a single Lascar, not a single Indian seaman, on the Tasmania was lost except by drowning; and although during the last ten years they had had on the average 600 or 700 Indian seamen constantly in the London docks during the bitter winters which we had latterly experienced, there had scarcely ever been an instance of one of them dying through the effects of cold. The loss of the Tasmania was not the only misfortune that had happened to the company in the past half-year. They were also under a considerable liability on account of a collision between the Nepaul and a Chinese vessel in the Yangtze river; but they were about to dispute that liability in a High Court of Appeal, and, he trusted, not without a fair prospect of success. It was satisfactory to know that, at all times, the company had been enabled to fulfil their public engagements, no matter what accidents might have happened; and it was an absolute fact that not for a single moment had the company's mail service been interfered with, or the mails late by an hour, through the mishaps to which he had referred. He was also glad to say that owing to the prudent policy which had been pursued by the directors for some years past in attending to these matters of reserves—a policy which had sometimes been a subject of criticism at their general meetings—the fluctuation in the value of their shares had been of the smallest moment, notwithstanding the heavy losses which had been sustained in the way he had mentioned. The cost to the company by the loss of the Tasmania alone would be £100,000. They were shortly about to obtain delivery of the four large vessels which were at present being built for the company—he alluded to the Victoria, the Britannia, the Oceana, and the Arcadia. The advent of those four vessels—and they would probably be followed even by others—marked a new feature in the company's history, and one which he need scarcely say the proprietors would watch with the greatest possible interest. Of one thing he was perfectly sure—namely, that the builders of the four vessels mentioned—Messrs. Caird and Co., of Greenock, and Messrs. Harland and Woolf, of Belfast—would turn out ships that would be equally creditable to themselves and satisfactory to the company. One of the facts showing how great the undertaking was which they were carrying out for the public in connection with their mail contracts and commercial service was that the cost of the four ships just named would be between £700,000 and £800,000. At the last meeting the proprietors were informed that the new contract for the India and China mail services had been arranged with Her Majesty's Government. Since that time the contract had been sealed, signed, and delivered for a period of ten years, and it now only awaited the usual ordeal of being passed through the House of Commons. He was also in a position to state that since the directors' report had actually been issued the contract for the Australian mail service had been definitely settled with Her Majesty's Government and the colonies. The amount the company would receive for the Australian contract would be £85,000 per annum, as at present, but the service they would have to perform would be of a higher and an improved character. He was not sure that the period of the Australian contract had been altogether definitely settled; but he was justified, he thought, in stating that it would probably be for seven years. Perhaps he ought also to mention, as a matter of general information, that while the company's service had always been, and would be in future, a fortnightly service, the Australian colonies, as the importance of their commercial position would entitle them to, would have a weekly service, and the alternate portion of the work would be undertaken by the Orient Company on, he believed, similar terms. With the Orient Company—as with all their competitors, he might say, in the Australian trade—they worked in a spirit of tolerably amicable rivalry; and he only hoped that the result of the new undertaking in connection with the Australian colonies would be equally successful for both companies. The supplemental charter, which the proprietors would be asked to approve that day, had been obtained in order to correct an omission in the previous charter with regard to the company's borrowing powers. There was no extension of those powers, but certain facilities would be obtained as to using them, should it be necessary to do so, and he believed that those facilities would prove advantageous to the company. With regard to the financial results of the half-year's working, he could not enter into details until the figures were before them next December; but he might mention that there had been a slight increase in their passenger traffic and a tolerable diminution in the expenditure. He regretted, however, to state that at the same time they had had a decrease in their freight receipts, which had more than counterbalanced the advantage they had gained in the other directions. That was a very unsatisfactory state of affairs. From 1883 to 1885 the company had had a steady advance in their freight revenue, owing not to the fact that freights were improved, but to the facts that they had enlarged the scope of their operations and that there was plenty of cargo obtainable at the moderate rates then prevailing. He regretted to say that 1886 and 1887 had seen a continuous diminution in the freight traffic, owing both to the fact that freights themselves had been lower and that in some quarters, at all events, there had not been the same amount of cargo obtainable. During the last six months, despatching their vessels from London every week, their cargo returns had fallen short by about £15,000 or £20,000, owing to the fact that there were more ships going than there was cargo to be carried. There had been in other parts of their trade considerable fluctuations. In some quarters there had been momentary signs of improvement. When he addressed them last December there was something like a "spurt" in the homeward Australian trade, which he regretted to say died away in the course of the month in a lamentable "fizzle." The general verdict which must be given with respect to the shipping trade in connection with the Far East during the past six months—or rather, he should say, in the past eighteen months or two years—was that it was lamentably overdone. He heartily wished that it had been in his power to make a more encouraging statement of facts on this subject, but, as he had often pointed out, the rapid growth of British tonnage had far exceeded the development of trade; and the shoe pinched in a remarkable way on those lines in which the company were interested—on what were called “the regular lines,” as to which every new outsider who came in took away from those who already had not enough for themselves. He was sorry to say that this mischief was by no means confined to competition among British ships. At the present moment, and for many months, they had been seriously feeling, on the regular lines, the effect of the recent development of foreign competition in our trade. The new lines which had been started by various French, German, and Italian companies to all parts of the East had necessarily affected the company prejudicially. He hoped next December, when the figures and details would be before him, to be able to speak in different terms altogether; but there was no doubt that in the shipping business there was at the present moment a perpetual struggle going on, and it was assuredly a case of the “survival of the fittest.” There was no rest from continual toil and continual opposition, and even to the most successful the success was only very moderate. That was the record, probably, of most trades in the country at the present time, but certainly it was the record of the shipping trade. The directors were fully alive to the difficulty of the task before them, but he trusted that in the future, as in the past, by carefully watching over the proprietors’ interests, and by a proper degree of enterprise, combined with a proper amount of prudence, they might be able to contrive for them a successful result.

The Right Hon. E. P. Bouvier seconded the resolution for the adoption of the report, which was carried unanimously. On the motion of the Chairman, seconded by Mr. J. Corner, a dividend was declared at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. The meeting was then made a special one, and the Chairman moved, and Mr. J. R. Engledue seconded, the following resolution, which was carried unanimously:—

“That the proprietors consent to the acceptance by the company of the supplemental charter dated the 19th day of January, 1887, enabling the company or its directors to create and issue debentures or debenture stock, or partly the one and partly the other, but so that the aggregate amount of the principal sums secured by such debentures and of the capital amount of such debenture stock shall not at any one time exceed £800,000; and also further consent that the directors for the time being of the company may issue such debentures or debenture stock from time to time as they shall think fit in accordance with the powers and authorities of the said supplemental charter.”

On the motion of Sir Thomas Dakin, a vote of thanks to the chairman, directors, and officers was passed, and the proceedings then terminated.

THE INDO-CHINA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY (LIMITED).

The sixth ordinary general meeting of this company was held at the Cannon-street Hotel on the 2nd inst.; Mr. J. Macandrew presiding.

The Secretary having read the notice convening the meeting, the report—given in our last issue—was taken as read. In moving its adoption the Chairman stated that the business of the company had progressed much as before, and no new employment had been opened up for their steamers. Their earnings showed a considerable decrease compared with those of the previous year, which, however, had been an exceptionally favourable year for them. The decrease in the net receipts had led to a corresponding diminution in the dividend, but as they were able to pay five per cent. he did not think the result of the year’s working would be considered unsatisfactory, remembering the unsatisfactory state of the shipping trade generally. Since the loss of the See Wo, referred to in the last report, they had had no serious casualty, and that vessel had been replaced by the purchase, on favourable terms, of the nearly new steamer Paumben, which they had re-named the Yik Sang. With regard to the prospects for the future, the directors were assured by their China agents that 1887 opened propitiously, and they were pretty confident that a good business would be done. The last monthly returns, sent by telegraph, were exceedingly satisfactory; and if they went on at the same rate, there would no doubt be a good account to show at the next meeting. Their fleet had been kept up in its usual good condition. The old vessels would be replaced as occasion required by new ones, but for the present no such additions to the company’s fleet would be required. The principal source of trouble and anxiety to the directors had been the low rate of exchange. The losses under this head on their remittance from the East had been about equivalent to one per cent. dividend. The directors could see no way by which this loss might be avoided, and it was impossible to foretell whether or no exchanges might fall still lower. Some diminution of profits had also been brought about by the competition on their Indian line of the subsidised steamers of the Austrian Lloyd and Rubattino Companies.

The motion for the adoption of the report was carried, and the dividend of 5 per cent., payable on the 17th inst. was declared. Messrs. J. Macandrew and W. Keswick, the retiring directors, were re-elected, and the auditors, Messrs. Turquand, Youngs and Co., were re-appointed. A shareholder, Mr. Mitchell, alluded to the fact that the company’s shares were not quoted on the Stock Exchange. The Chairman, in reply, said the matter was under consideration, and measures would in due time be adopted for complying with the rules of the Stock Exchange as regards the issue of shares to the public. The proceedings terminated with the customary vote of thanks to the chairman and directors.

THE ORIENTAL BANK CORPORATION.

In the Supreme Court of Judicature (Court of Appeal), before Lords Justices Cotton, Lindley, and Bowen, an appeal was made by the New Oriental Bank Corporation from a refusal of Mr. Justice Chitty on the 20th ult. to discharge or vary an order made on the 12th

ult. by his lordship in Chambers, sanctioning a conditional agreement dated March 18, 1887, and made between the Oriental Bank Corporation and its official liquidator as vendors and the Assets Realisation Company as purchasers for sale of outstanding assets of the Oriental Bank Corporation to the Assets Realisation Company. By the agreement it was provided that the liquidator would apply to the Court for such order or orders as might be required for making calls on and ordering payment thereof by all or any of the contributories then settled or thereafter to be settled on the list of contributories, and would do all such acts and things as might be proper to augment the assets of the corporation intended to be thereby sold, and to diminish the liabilities thereof. By way of consideration for the sale the purchasing company undertook (1) in the case of all claims admitted or proved against the corporation in respect of which the claimants had agreed to accept in final settlements a division of seventeen shillings in the pound, and in respect of which such seventeen shillings had not been paid, the purchasing company should authorise the liquidator to retain out of the assets in his hands such a sum as should make up the 17s.; (2) in the case of all claims which, before the date of the order to be made for the final dissolution of the corporation, had been or should be admitted or proved (except the claimants mentioned as accepting 17s.), to in the first place authorise the liquidator to retain out of the moneys in his hands such a sum for distribution among the claimants as should bring the divisions paid to them up to 15s. in the pound, unless divisions amounting to 15s. had been already paid to them, and to also concur in a then existing arrangement by the liquidator to pay the claimants a further division of 1s. 3d., and make payments to the liquidator to answer a further division of 1s. 3d. in February, 1888, of 1s. 3d. in February, 1889, and 1s. in February, 1890, the effect of which would be that the claimants would finally receive 19s. 9d. in the pound. And the agreement contained provisions for the upkeep of the corporation’s estates in Ceylon and Mauritius by the liquidator out of the assets until the company should take possession, and after that date for their upkeep by the company itself, the company, however, being responsible as from Dec. 1, 1887 for all expenditure in respect of such upkeep.

Mr. Rigby, Q.C., Mr. Romer, Q.C., and Mr. F. B. Palmer were for the appellants; Sir Horace Davey, Q.C. (with whom Mr. Latham, Q.C., and Mr. T. H. Wright) were for the liquidator, and Sir Henry James, Q.C. (with whom Mr. Maclean, Q.C., and Mr. Vernon R. Smith) were for the Assets Realisation Company, supported the decision of Mr. Justice Chitty.

Lord Justice Cotton, in delivering judgment in favour of the respondents, said that to a great extent such an order as this must be in the discretion of the Court, and he saw the risk which might attend any interference on the part of the Court of Appeal. Their lordships must, however, consider whether the judge had exercised the discretion given to him. One question which was strongly presented to the Court was, why was no attempt made to realise the separate parts of the estate of the corporation? The answer was that Mr. Macdonald’s affidavit did not state that the property could be sold separately better than en masse; he had, indeed, suggested a rival scheme. Then a great point had been made by Mr. Rigby and Mr. Romer, that there was no evidence on which the Court could come to a judgment as to the value of the property. That was true to some extent, but the property was of such a character that it was scarcely susceptible of valuation. It was practically impossible to obtain a proper valuation; the materials before the Judge were, however, sufficient to enable him to take a proper view as to whether the property should be sold. Mr. Justice Chitty had had the whole winding up before him. His Lordship did not rely on that fact alone; but, considering all the circumstances, he could not say that the Judge in the Court below had exercised his discretion on insufficient materials. It was for the appellants to make out that the discretion had been wrongly exercised, and they had failed to do so. It would be wrong to interfere with the exercise of the discretion, not only on account of the probable effect on the creditors’ interests, but because it was not shown that the Judge had acted on insufficient materials. His Lordship was of opinion that the decision was right and that the appeal failed.

Lord Justice Lindley was of opinion that it was impossible to say that there was not a sale within section 95 of the Companies Act, 1862. That being so, the appellants had failed to show that Mr. Justice Chitty in exercising his discretion had acted on erroneous principles or on insufficient materials. It was evident that the assets were wholly incapable of valuation. The very best course had been followed for the benefit of the parties, and the discretion of the Judge was properly exercised.

Lord Justice Bowen concurred, and the appeal was dismissed, with costs.

THE Government of India have this year adopted the plan of reviewing the Registration reports of all the different local Governments and Administrations in one resolution instead of separately. From this it appears that the number of registrations in 1885–86 was 1,756,622 as compared with 1,627,650 in the previous year. The total receipts of the department were Rs. 2,871,355 against Rs. 2,837,933, and the expenditure was Rs. 1,861,874 against Rs. 1,903,957. The increase in the registrations was general throughout all the provinces with the exception of the Punjab and Kurg, where they were the same as in the previous year, and in Burma, where there was a decrease owing to the disturbed state of the country. The increase in the receipts was also general, except in Kurg, but the decrease in expenditure was confined to four provinces, Madras, Bombay, the North-West Provinces, and Assam, all the others showing an increase. The Government of India considers that the development of registration throughout the country is indicative of the popularity of the department.

FOOD PRODUCTS.

EXTRACTS.

THE COMPANY'S EXTRACTS are manufactured on a new principle, which yields products of the very best quality.

"Normal" Food Extract is superior to most, if not all, other Meat Extracts, owing to its richness in stimulating and restorative properties. It contains, as shown by analysis, less ash and water, and more substances soluble in alcohol, and more nitrogenous compounds than the best known Extracts.

In 1 lb. Jars	84/- per doz. Jars.
" ½ "	45/- "
" ¼ "	24/- "
" 2 oz. Jars	13/6 "
" 1 "	7/6 "

"Normal" Vegetable Extract is a pure Extract of Fresh Vegetables. It imparts an agreeable flavour to Soups, Sauces, Stews, Gravies, Meat-Jellies, &c., while its stimulating properties are analogous to those of Meat Extract, making it a valuable addition to all diets, and all but indispensable to Vegetarians.

In 1 lb. Jars	36/- per doz. Jars.
" ½ "	20/- "
" ¼ "	12/- "
" 2 oz. Jars	7/6 "
" 1 "	4/6 "

"Normal" Lobster Extract for flavouring Soups, Sauces, &c.

In 2 oz. Jars	18/- per doz.
" 1 "	10/- "

SOUPS, &c.

THE "NORMAL" SOUPS are guaranteed to be manufactured from the very best materials, and besides being most palatable they are of high dietetic value.

"Normal" Clear Soup :
12 pint Jar	22/- per doz.

"Normal" Pea Soup :—

Dry, in Skins :

6 pint Skins	12/- per doz.
3 "	6/6 "

"Normal" Thick Gravy Soup :

3 pint tins	9/- per doz.
1 "	4/- "

"Normal" Clear Gravy Soup :

This may be used as Clear Soup or converted into almost any other kind of Soup, such as Ox-tail, Hare, Curry, Julienne, Carrot, Tomato, or Cabbage, by the slight addition of substances ordinarily used for preparing such Soups. (Directions for making the various kinds of Soups may be had on application.)

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is especially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS, originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and elite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

COUGHS, COLDS, STOMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances deriving elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This claim is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 12th, 1884.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA, DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY.

GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, LONDON, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "3 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1886.

DR. J. C. BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike.—We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, Life Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is. 1d., 2s. 9d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURERS, J. T. DAVENPORT, SGT. Russell St., W.C.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

FRIDAY, JUNE 10, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 24th May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 22nd May; and from Calcutta to the 21st May.

OWING to the change in the mail service for the monsoon season the Indian papers to hand have only four days' news to chronicle instead of the usual seven days' budget.

THE Government of India have declined to accede to the proposal to issue a special coin in honour of the Queen's Jubilee, on account of the inconvenience that would be caused.

THE Bombay Corporation at their late meeting debated the question of providing additional market accommodation for the city.

THE conclusion arrived at was that the Municipality should, as a rule, erect their own markets, but that private enterprise, wherever properly directed, should be encouraged.

A MEMORIAL portrait of Sir Rivers Thompson, the late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, was recently unveiled in the Calcutta Town Hall.

A COMMERCIAL agreement has been entered into between the Government of India and Siam.

THE foundation-stone of the Eden Hotel was laid at Calcutta on May 19 by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal.

A NEW theatre was opened in Bombay on May 21.

H.H. THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL has been pleased to accept the office of Patron of the Mahomedan Society of Calcutta.

THE people of Madras are preparing to celebrate the erection of the Queen's statue on Jubilee Day on an extensive scale.

MR. MONMOHUN GHOSE, barrister-at-law, has been elected president of the East Bengal Association at Dacca.

MR. G. S. FORBES, officiating Under-Secretary in the Foreign Office, will be posted to Hyderabad as First Assistant to the Resident there on Mr. Cunningham's return from furlough early in July.

COLONEL TOKER takes three months' Burma leave before joining the Military Department, and Captain G. Barrow acts meanwhile.

MR. PHEROZESHAH MEHTA, a Parsee gentleman and a barrister-at-law, has been appointed to the Bombay Legislative Council.

COLONEL PLANT, the Commissioner of the Tenasserim Division, who met with a serious accident recently at Moulmein, continues to improve by last reports, though he is still at times partly unconscious.

THE Engineer officers employed in preparing estimates for doubling certain sections of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway, and for converting them to broad-gauge, have now been at work for some time, and their report may be expected in the course of next month. Until these alternative estimates are submitted nothing can be said as to the action which the Government of India are likely to take in conjunction with the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company, to whom the working of the Rajputana-Malwa system has been leased.

DR. GEORGE WATT, C.I.E., who recently returned from his duties at the London Exhibition, is engaged at Simla under the Government of India in the completion of a work on the "Economic Products of India," of which the first volume has already been issued.

MANUEL MARTINEZ is at present in confinement at Allahabad, awaiting trial on a charge of fraudulent breach of trust in respect of a sum of upwards of Rs. 60,000, which passed through his hands as a trustee under the will of the late Mr. Staten, of the firm of Laurie and Staten.

THE strength of Gholam Hyder Orakzai's force, now marching from Mukur to Maruf, is about four thousand regulars, viz., ten rissalas of cavalry, three batteries of artillery, and three regiments of infantry. About the same number of regulars are also at Ghazni.

A MAHOMEDAN zemindar of Mymensingh has given landed property, valued at Rs. 30,000, and yielding an income of about Rs. 3,000 a year, as a grant-in-aid of the Kangal Graham School in that district, on the understanding that the school may, in future, be designated "Syud Nawab Ali School."

IN Dinagapore and Maldah rice has been selling of late at 25 seers per rupee. In Cuttack at 18 seers in town, and from 22 to 25 seers in the interior.

THE Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab has arrived at Simla. He opened the "Victoria Bridge" over the Jhelum at Chak Nizam, on Monday, the 16th. Mr. Lyall's arrival at Simla will enable the work of the Select Committee on the Punjab Land Bills to be proceeded with forthwith.

STEADY progress is being made at army headquarters with the Mobilisation Scheme, and every detail connected with the massing of troops on the North-West Frontier is being carefully worked out.

A MEETING has been held at the United Service Institute, Simla, to consider the question of raising a memorial to the late Sir Charles Macgregor. The Commander-in-Chief presided, and some forty or fifty officers were present, including the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, Generals Chesney, Elles, and Chapman, Mr. H. M. Durand, and others. Proposals for a statue, a picture, a scholarship at Marlborough, an Army prize in India for reconnoitring, and so forth, were submitted. It was resolved to open a subscription list and communicate with the various centres as to the form the memorial should take. A committee was formed, with the Commander-in-Chief as President and Colonel Lance as Secretary, for this object, and a considerable amount was collected in the room.

A TIGER-SHOOTING accident has occurred near Khandala, in the Bombay Presidency. On the 19th inst. Major Lyons, a retired officer, was severely mauled by a tiger at the Karlee Caves. Accompanied by Captain FitzGerald, of the Durham Light Infantry, he went in pursuit of a tiger, and, finding the brute inside a cave, walked to the entrance and lodged two bullets in its body. The tiger charged, and, seizing Major Lyons by the leg, carried him about 200 yards. The brute was hammered about the head by Major Lyons with the muzzle of his rifle, and was thus compelled to open its jaws; but it again seized him, and he then thrust his rifle down its throat, when it made off with the weapon. Major Lyons has been severely injured, a large piece of flesh having been torn from his leg; but he is said to be doing well.

SIR S. RAMASWAMY MUDALIAR, Kt., C.I.E., Sheriff of Madras, intends proceeding to England to be present at the celebration of the Queen's Jubilee in London. At the recent meeting of the Committee for the celebration in Madras of Her Majesty's Jubilee on the 20th June, it was suggested that another "Presidential" address of congratulation should be presented to the Queen-Empress, and that Sir Ramaswamy Mudaliar should be asked to convey the same to London, and presented to the Queen on the 20th June, but it is believed that the Sheriff has declined the honour.

Notes of the Week.

It will be a matter of regret to the many friends of Mr. Pedder, of the Revenue Department India Office, to learn that this able and popular officer has again been forced to take leave of absence. The strain upon his health, owing to the arduous duties of office, has been so great as to oblige him to relinquish work for a time.

SEVERAL of the leading West-end clubs have shown a good example in inviting the leading Indian princes and chiefs who have come to England to take part in the Jubilee ceremonies to become honorary members. Amongst the first to do so were the Indian United Service, the Oriental, and the St. Stephen's, and, we presume, of course, the Northbrook.

Who regulates the issue of invitations to the State balls, garden parties, and other Royal festivities to which these Native noblemen are being invited? We ask the question because it would appear that the names of many distinguished Anglo-Indians and others who have received Indian decorations have been omitted from the list of guests. This must surely have been an oversight—otherwise the quick intelligence of the Native gentlemen will be exercised to know why men wearing decorations given for special services rendered to India have not been invited to meet them by the Kaisir-i-Hind, who conferred the distinctions.

THE remarks which have been made in several quarters regarding the behaviour of the Lascar sailors during the wreck of the Tasmania have occasioned considerable controversy in India. We plead guilty to having a preference for English sailors—that is, English sailors in the true sense of the word, and having the courage of our opinions we said so. But we are glad to find that the Lascar is not without friends, and these have rushed into print in the Indian newspapers very boldly in his defence.

As the question of Lascar behaviour on board of the Tasmania is still a matter undergoing judicial inquiry we shall not go into the dispute regarding the accuracy or otherwise of the charge brought against them by Mr. G. W. Allen in his letter to the Standard, describing his experiences of the terrible night of the wreck. But, in justice to the accused, it is only fair to say that evidence has been brought forward as to their courage in a similar disaster, and also as to their powers of enduring fatigue and cold in European climates.

As to the former, a letter is quoted written by Mr. J. M. Maclean, M.P., to his paper, the Bombay Gazette, in 1879. Mr. Maclean was a passenger on board the s.s. Australia which broke down in the English Channel that year, and he describes the conduct of the Lascar crew both on board the Australia and Kaisar-i-Hind, to which the passengers of the former were transferred, in highly eulogistic terms. The European quartermasters of the former vessel are said to have behaved badly, but it is stated that the Lascars behaved admirably, in spite of bad example, and showed themselves to be "capital sailors, cool and ready in an emergency, and obeying orders carefully. Otherwise the ship might never have been floated."

REGARDING their powers of endurance a correspondent quotes a letter written to the Times of India from London in the beginning of 1881, in which the writer says, after mentioning the severity of the weather which visited England in January that year:—

The lines of railway were blocked, traffic in the metropolis even was for some time, in great part, suspended, and numbers of men, horses, cattle, and sheep, were frozen to death. Yet the Lascars seemed to suffer even less from the rigour of the climate than the Europeans, and with three or four vessels discharging, loading and repacking in dock at the same time, having on board, say 500 Lascars, there was hardly a case of sickness among the Native crews, and not a single instance of death.

It is only fair after what we ourselves wrote lately about these men to give the above arguments on the other side, if only on the principle of giving a certain personage who is not a Lascar his due.

JUBILEE suggestions have been plentiful enough in England, but it would seem that they have been quite as numerous and equally as strange in India. Had all the latter been carried out, the Civil and Military Gazette of Lahore thus depicts what the situation would have been:—"All the subalterns would be at home on three months' privilege leave, with a year's pay in their pockets. All the general officers, with sumptuous gratuities befitting their rank, would be helping the subalterns to jubilate. About two-thirds of the civilians would be at home on six months' leave—three months by Royal favour, added to three privilege. Most of the privates in Her Majesty's army would be exceeding jolly on three months' pay gratuity. As three-fourths of their non-commissioned officers would have secured gratis passage in troopships, and would be making merry at home, the chances of regimental discipline would be fragmentary. About one-half of the Volunteers would be at home, and the survivors would be decorated. All the clerks in all the offices would be shifted up one grade; and his Excellency the Viceroy would be Speaker in a House of Representatives in session assembled at Sealdah or Bow Bazaar. But there would be no House, because all the representative men of India would be in London on free tickets. This, however, would be of no importance; for the Government of India would by this time have been compelled to declare itself bankrupt."

A TELEGRAM from Renter gives details of the skirmish in which Lieutenant Darrah was killed at Tacurgma in Upper Burma:—"A body of about 150 insurgents was intrenched behind three sets of stockades in tiers up the face of a hill. The stockades were carried in turn by rapid advances, and the dacoits were driven out of their final position on the crest of the hill. They were pursued until nightfall, and the stockades were burnt. Lieutenant Darrah was killed while attacking a stockade, and Lieutenant Cunnage and several Sepoys were wounded. The loss of the dacoits is unknown. They carried away their wounded, leaving one dead body behind."

OUR readers will with ourselves be glad to welcome to the columns of this paper the well-known initials of H. G. K., which they will find appended to-day to the graceful tribute paid by him to Her Majesty in a Jubilee anthem. Now that our old friend and contributor is in the groves of Parnassus we trust that he will send us other verses from his facile and brilliant pen.

In conveying his thanks to the friends who subscribed for a parting souvenir to him, Lord Ulick Browne writes from Sligo:—"I hope you will kindly convey to the subscribers my warmest thanks for such a substantial token of their regard, and tell them that I appreciate it and their kindness very highly. I propose to spend the amount in a library of standard books which will serve to remind me for the rest of my life of the many kind and considerate friends I made during my residence in India."

THE NATIONAL JUBILEE MEMORIAL.—The Civil and Military Gazette, in noticing the Prince of Wales's recent despatch to the Commander-in-Chief on the subject of soldiers' subscriptions to the National Jubilee Memorial, says:—"At the first glance, this solicitation of subscriptions from the soldier, who is none too well paid, has an ungracious look. True, the subscriptions are to be optional, the importance of the soldier to the Empire he guards is duly acknowledged, and the real interest which Her Gracious Majesty has always taken in his welfare is suitably emphasised; yet there remains a false ring about the so-called spontaneity of an offering that has to be evoked by such methods. Still, we must look at the other side of the matter. The 'National Memorial' scheme has been launched beyond recall, and it is incumbent upon the Queen's subjects to make it a memorial worthy of the occasion. If even the private soldier is to have a subscription list put before him, and a tacit admission thereby made that the scheme requires nursing, it behoves the rest of us, who are out of reach of these requests that look so like commands, to accept the facts, and consider whether we do not all owe something, more than we have given, to show our gratitude to the Queen."

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

INDIAN JAILS.

(Englishman.)

Notwithstanding the many complaints that are made regarding the cruel treatment of prisoners in Indian Jails, the last report for Bengal shows that there has been a very large decrease in all the most severe forms of punishment. Solitary imprisonment, reduced diet, handcuffing and wearing fetters, are all allowed to be inflicted by the officials for jail offences. Attempts to escape are also punished by the imposition of fetters, and in this form of punishment there was also a large decrease, the actual number of cases being only 136 against 234 in 1885. This latter fact is no doubt partly due to the objection felt by the Inspector of Jails, and in which the Lieutenant-Governor agrees, to fetter prisoners for safe custody, as Dr. Lethbridge calls it "a barbarous and unjust practice," and considers that, under a proper system of jail guarding, the fetters rather tend to encourage escapes by giving the warders a false idea of the safety of the prisoners. Facts certainly bear out Dr. Lethbridge's opinion, for in 1870, when fetters were universally applied, there were 192 escapes, whereas in 1886 they had fallen to 17. There was a slight increase in corporal punishment from 347 to 396, but this was chiefly due to an unusual number of floggings in the Presidency jail rendered necessary by insubordination among the prisoners. In twelve jails no floggings at all were administered.

DRINK IN INDIA.

(The Asian.)

It is to be regretted that such an amiable and estimable clergyman as Archdeacon Farrar should have allowed himself to indulge in the rhetorical antithesis: "We found India sober, and we have made it drunken." The readers of this journal know that no opportunity has been lost in these columns of denouncing any measures taken by Government which seemed calculated to open the door to an increase of drunkenness among any classes of the Native population. But it is one thing to try to prevent the growth of an evil habit and entirely a different thing to accuse a whole nation of having succumbed to an evil habit. Archdeacon Farrar has never been in India, and can have no personal knowledge of the question. He must, therefore, have relied on the statements of his friends, and as Mr. Samuel Smith seconded the resolution proposed by Archdeacon Farrar at the meeting held in London "on the demoralisation of Native races," it is obvious that that veracious traveller must have supplied him with some of his information. In fact, Mr. Smith is reported to have said, in his own speech, that in his recent visit to India he had observed a great increase of drunkenness. It might be deemed impertinent to inquire into what circle of Native society Mr. Smith made his observations, but with a view to redeem the character of the people of Bengal from the charge of general drunkenness, which has been so recklessly brought against them by Archdeacon Farrar, it is only necessary to refer to the figures given in the statements appended to Mr. Edgar's report on the excise of Bengal in 1884. Mr. Edgar makes the total population of Bengal at a little above sixty-six millions. He gives the number of consumers of spirituous liquors at a little below five millions, and the revenue collected from these five millions on the drink consumed by them averages one rupee one anna a-head. If the whole sixty-six millions drank spirituous liquors the revenue would show that they spent less than two annas a-head. It is ridiculous to describe a nation as drunken under these circumstances. In England the Drink Bill, as it is called by the Times, shows that each individual in the British nation spends an average of nearly four pounds sterling annually on its drink. The character of the people of India has been grievously defamed, but this ought not to prevent our Government from doing all that is in its power to prevent an increase of drunkenness.

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT ANOMALIES.

(Indian Engineering.)

The more closely we analyse the evidence tendered before the Sub-Committee of the Public Service Commission, by the officers of the Public Works Department, the more are we convinced that a thorough and immediate reorganisation of that department, on an efficient footing, is an imperative duty on the part of Government, which could not be conveniently postponed to the distant future. As in the absence of proper discipline the greatest army in the world may be converted into a mere rabble, incapable of any sustained exertion, so for want of an esprit de corps, departmental management may dwindle into mere routine work devoid of life and energy. The battle of Cooper's Hill and Roorkee men continues to wax warm. What we are present concerned with is the status of the officers of the various branches of the Department in regard to the pay, past and present allowances, furlough, and lastly, pension. There are so many discrepancies in this respect in the rules which govern the cases of men recruited from several sources that they deserve more than a passing notice. Let us take a typical case, that of Mr. Wright, Executive Engineer, Lucknow, who was trained at Roorkee. He thought it a hardship that he should not be put on the same footing as a Cooper's Hill man in the matter of pension till he had attained the position of a Superintending Engineer. But Mr. Wright is not singular in the expression of this opinion. Our readers now draw their own inference as to the reason why others, and Roorkee men in particular, are placed under a ban as compared with favoured men in the service. Herein lies the secret cause of the discontent which has permeated the Department to its lowest strata. Now, we ask, why is this invidious distinction in the treatment of two classes of men who serve the same Government with the same earnestness, and it may be presumed with the same knowledge of the work required of them? But it is not in one direction that this gross inequality is visible; it pervades the entire service, and each set of men has some complaint to offer. One section has been allowed new pension rules and others deprived of them. Some have got the furlough and not the pension rules, while in the case of their fellow-workers in the same field the process has been reversed. The more fortunate ones have been secured in the enjoyment of both the new furlough and pension rules, and others have had neither. To our mind the only just course to be followed was to grant the favourable pension rules to all the men now in the Department, with the reservation that in future men appointed in India would not benefit by the new rules. Had this been done no one would have cause for any reasonable complaint of having been ill-used. But as matters stand at present it is difficult to understand how this distinction is to be upheld without giving rise to serious complications and discontent.

THE RICE TRADE.

(Times of India.)

The duty of sixpence per hundredweight on rice exported from India and Burma is both an anachronism and an iniquity. It might possibly be justified on the ground of financial exigencies if India held a monopoly in rice production; but this is so far from being the case that Java, Saigon, Sumatra, Brazil, and other countries are all in the field, and are rapidly elbowing the handicapped Indian rice out of the European market. The evils arising from the impost are wide reaching, and the Indian cultivator is not the only sufferer. The English rice millers and merchants are also feeling the pinching of the shoe, and are raising their voice for the abolition of the tax. They point out that the former pre-eminent position held by England in the European rice trade has been lost during recent years. In 1874, England's share in the business was 71 per cent.; in 1885, it had fallen to 27 per cent.; and the decline is still going on. In consequence many of the rice mills in London and in Liverpool have been closed, and a large number of workmen sent adrift. A variety of causes have conduced to this collapse of a once thriving industry, but the export duty is certainly the head and front of the offending. The tax is levied equally upon cleaned and rough rice, with the result that the English miller is at once placed at a disadvantage of some five shillings per ton as compared with the Burmese miller, the former having to pay the duty upon the heavier quantity of rough rice to make up his ton of cleaned. Moreover, when the uncleaned rice has been taken to England, and manufactured into white rice, rice flour, and rice meal, the two latter products have to compete with similar wheat products, which being unburdened by any tax hold an important and unfair advantage in the market. Then the Continental tariffs further damage the English trade. The state of matters is still more serious as regards France. Again, in the West Indies and in other Crown colonies enormous taxes are levied on food stuffs in the interest of the plantation owners, whose aim it is to keep up the value of the land and keep down the value of the wages paid to the negroes and coolies. From these considerations it will be evident that the grievances of the rice trade are many, and urgently call for redress. We all know that since the removal in 1873 of the export duty on wheat sent out of India the Indian wheat trade has advanced by leaps and bounds. The removal of the export duty on Indian rice would help to revive the rice-milling trade in England, would lead to an extension of the use of rice as a food stuff in Europe, would place India on an equal footing with the other rice-producing countries, and would undoubtedly lead to a greatly increased volume of business in the staple.

BURMA'S MINERAL WEALTH.

(Rangoon Times.)

Immersed as Lord Dufferin was in the political difficulties of the times in Upper Burma, when he penned his now famous minute of the 17th February, 1886, on the subject of annexation and the steps that necessarily would have to be taken for the establishment and consolidation of our rule in the newly-acquired province, he did not forget the natural resources of the country, and with commendable forethought wrote as follows:—

"It is important also to arrive at an early estimate of the mineral wealth of the country, and an officer of the Geological Department will be placed at the disposal of the Chief Commissioner for this purpose."

The Geological Department accordingly sent over one of their staff during the season of 1886-87, and he is now exploring those parts of the upper province where mineral wealth is reported to have existence. While, therefore, we await his professional report, it may not be without interest to the general public to deal with, in a short and popular way, some of the riches that are latent in one part at least of the whole of the recently-acquired country. To say that Burma is naturally rich is only to give expression to a belief as old as it is extensive. Both sections of the province enjoy this reputation; and, if anything, the upper one, rightly or wrongly, is deemed the richer of the two. And in this direction it is hard to name another division either better or so well-known as that tract of country where the infant waters of the Chindwin roll down the hill sides, under the Shan cognomen of the Namtonai and its affluents. The country in this part is extremely wild, and the tangled jungle wood as well as the multitudinous mountainspurs and hill ranges appear to have only too successfully opposed all familiar acquaintance with the locality and its semi-savage inhabitants. But a rough guess of the physical characters of the place, together with advantageous expeditions planned and carried out at distant intervals with much risk and danger, have afforded basis for some such conclusions as the following:—Situated between the basins of the upper flows of both the Brahmapootra and Irrawaddy exists a wedge of mountain land connecting the Patkoi range on the one side with the higher chains of what eventually are known as the Pongloun and Nattoung ranges of Middle and Lower Burma. Indeed, all the way from Assam on the west to Yunnan on the east this huge stretch of upland exists, frowning down, as it were, on the uplands and plateaux at its feet before they merge into first the rolling and then level plains of Prome and Pegu. Offshoots from this high mountain mass give us such ranges as the Shwedoungyi, with valley-like hollows rich in mineral wealth. And the valley between the Patkoi and Shwedoungyi ranges, giving birth to the trickling streamlets that afterwards combine to produce the Chindwin River, is well known as the Payindwin, or better still known as the Hookoung Valley, some 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. It opens out in a south-easterly direction, and is in shape something like a horseshoe, the curvature of the hills, down whose inner slopes flow the tributaries of the Chindwin, forming, as it were, the rim of the shoe, while the lump formed by the Tsambo Toun and neighbouring eminences might be taken as the place where the frog of the horse's hoof would be. Between the rim and this lump of elevation exist the Amber Mines, while outside of Tsambo Toun, towards the south-west, amongst the heights and depressions that almost encircle the glittering wavelets of Lake Indaungyi, are those Jade or Serpentine mines so famous for their yield. From this place not many years ago a block of precious jade, a cubic yard large and valuing Rs. 1,00,000, was obtained and sent to Rangoon for sale. The Chinese have a superstitious regard for the partially translucent pale grey, apple green tinted jade, and they have for years leased these mines for purposes of trade. They make charms out of it, amulets and rings, which they say protect the wearer against fevers of all kinds, particularly the eruptive, contagious sorts. They carve cups, too, out of it with much labour, which they say will split if poison is put into them. Not only in Burmese territory but in Central Asia, in the streams from the Kuenlun range, in south Kotan, and in the vicinity of Yarkand, Chinese have for ages now sought the mineral for its supposed virtues; and it will be within the memory of some of our readers that the ancient Greeks had some such belief as well. A kind of jade termed nephrite received its name from them on the supposition that it was a specific in diseases of the kidney. Much of what is sold as jade is worthless, being imitations, and some of them most clever imitations in glass, as may any day be seen in the bazaars of Rangoon. Serpentine is not unfrequently passed off for jade, but serpentine is much softer than the mineral it imitates. It is called by the Chinese zu.

The jade stone, or, as it is oftener termed, serpentine, industry used to be carried on in the locality above-mentioned to a great extent. The mines occur 25 miles to the south-west of Meinkhwa, a chief village of the Mogoung district, and at times some 1,000 men—Shans, Chinese, Pathays, and Kachyans—have been known to be engaged in digging for loose boulders in the soil. Much of this mineral used to be taken to Momein and worked up there for the Chinese market. A pair of bracelets of the finest quality costs in Momein Rs. 100; what they would fetch in Canton may be guessed when it is stated that rings of this stone bought by Dr. Anderson at Bhamo for Rs. 4 each would sell in Canton for £2. It is said the Kings of Burma got from Rs. 40,000 to half a lakh as revenue from each lessee of the jade mines. The Chinese esteem that sort which is of a bright green, like emerald, as the most valuable; but red and pale pinkish kinds are also valued. In Rangoon the pale pinkish kind is very seldom seen; the red has never come under our observation, while the most common is the translucent pale grey clouded with apple-green. Not long ago a troupe of Chinese actors visited Rangoon, the prima donna of these travelling artists possessed an excellent pair of bracelets of the pale grey and pinkish kind which she said she wore to keep her from sickness in her travels.

Of the amber obtained in this remarkable valley, we find we cannot say much this issue, but we hope to do so in an early one; when we also trust to say something about the varnish, rubber, and other vegetable productions to be obtained here. If ever the hope is realised of the Burma system of railways being linked on to the Indian system in the Upper Assam Valley, then the line must, after extension to Bhamo, cross over the river to the Mogoung district and perforce pass through this world-famed Hookoung Valley. We trust then that in our dealing with the mineral and vegetable resources of this place nothing will be done hastily, or unfairly. The locality is inhabited by people, the most civilised of whom are the Shans, who possess villages in the heart of the valley by the borders of its numerous streams. It should be the aim of our policy to conciliate not only the Shans, but the wild semi-savage tribes who avoid the open and live in the jungle and hill fastnesses.

TECHNICAL EDUCATION.

(Indian Planters' Gazette.)

The Provincial Government of Bengal, as well as the Government of India, are at present engaged in considering in what way technical education can best be advanced in India! The safe and proper answer to this question is, that the Governments, Imperial and Provincial, had better let technical education alone. The advancement of the industrial arts of India is no doubt very desirable, slowly vanishing as they are before the impact of Western manufactures. How may this gradual decay be arrested, and how can the slow process of the deterioration of the Indian art products be retarded or arrested? are questions which may well engage the attention of the Government, and the earnest and patient inquiry of every man, Native and European, who has the best interests of India at heart. To postulate that technical education is the cure for India's industrial ills, and then to set about applying the supposed cure, for that appears to be the wonderfully logical process at present engaged in by the Government, is, to say the least of it, remarkable. No scheme of theoretical instruction based on book knowledge, even though wedded to practical demonstrations in a workshop, will resuscitate decaying industries like those of India. In the old days when Indian indigenous art was, at its best, a best which no modern skill may ever overreach, the potter, the weaver and the workers in wood and metals were not subjected to the keen competition of modern life; they were left to the leisurely elaboration of design and fabric and structure, working or not working as little or as much as they chose, under the patronage of a community, or a few families or a powerful Chief; and in the verandah of the Rajahs' or Nawabs' palace designs of great beauty and artistic skill were conceived and worked out by the traditional craftsmen of the raj or the hereditary worker in clay or metal. The railway and the Suez Canal, coming in the wake of England's dominion of India have modified the old sleepy life of India, have sensibly effected the production of true works of art by the importation of tawdry colour and design from the West, and by the falling-off in the support of indigenous artisans among Native families which in other days was traditional. The cure for this is not the training of men in the principles of design, the teaching of a little drawing, a little this or little that; courses of lectures in the next thing, and scholarship for something else, all of which would literally be thrown away on lads who had no more idea of making their living by handicrafts than they had of becoming coolies. The cure may be difficult, even impossible, to find, but it is not in the direction of technical education, as indicated by writers in the Native Press and advocated by men whose knowledge of the subject may safely be placed in the region of zero.

SIR W. WEDDERBURN'S JUBILEE.

(Times of India.)

The entertainments given in honour of the retiring Chief Secretary and attended by him with the due knowledge of the local Government, give rise to a simple and serious question: "Has any officer a right, on his retirement, to distinctly disobey the orders of the Government of India?" Only two short years ago the Government of India caused certain rules regarding entertainments and addresses to retiring officials to be published in the Bombay Government Gazette. The first rule prohibits "all servants of Government, Covenanted or Uncovenanted, to receive complimentary or valedictory addresses in any form; or to accept testimonials of any kind; or to attend public meetings, or complimentary entertainments of a formal and public character held in their honour." The second rule goes on to state that "The Government views with disfavour all similar manifestations in the case of retired officers when following immediately upon their retirement from active service." The Government of India then proceed to state that they have no objection to a retiring officer accepting a farewell entertainment supported by his personal friends. "But it is expected that the proceedings on such occasions will be substantially of a private and informal character." The durbars of Poona, held in honour of Sir William Wedderburn, cannot by any stretch of language be regarded as an entertainment "of a private and informal character." The speeches delivered at the reception of Sir William Wedderburn at the Fergusson College proved that the entertainment was not of a private or informal character. The best legacy a high official could leave his Native admirers would be an example of respect for properly constituted authority. It is hardly disguised for a man who has held one of the highest offices in the State to fly in the face of the orders of the Supreme Government the day he retires from the service. It bears a painful resemblance to the conduct of the schoolboy who thinks it manly to smoke the moment he gets out of bounds.

THE MILITARY POSITION IN INDIA.

(Bombay Gazette.)

"Altogether I do not feel very easy about our military position in India," writes Sir George Campbell in his book, just issued, "The British Empire." This is written, be it noted, after the addition of thirty thousand men to the strength of the army in India, which has entailed upon this country the income-tax, and a good deal of financial anxiety. If with so large an addition; so recently made, to the military force available we have a right to feel uneasy, what is the reason? The reason appears to be twofold, having reference to the condition of things in the North-West, where we may some day come in contact with a great European Power, while in the South-East we have by annexing Burma pushed our Indian frontier in that direction a thousand miles into space, where we approach contact with another great European Power, and with the greatest of Asiatic Powers, China. The whole of the thirty thousand men had scarcely been added to the army when they were sent for service into Upper Burma, and though half of them have come back, half of them still remain beyond the Irrawadi, to supplement the efforts of seventeen thousand police to keep order in the jungles of that remote territory. It may be as well to point out, like the writer of the book to which we have just referred, that this remote territory is not only far outside the natural frontiers of India, but has nothing in common with the population, the religions, or the customs of India. On that account it has been found quite impracticable to raise a single regiment of Burmese, though Lower Burma has been British since Lord Dalhousie's time, and that the attempts made to raise Burmese police have proved very unsatisfactory, the complaint being constantly heard that they are on good terms with the dacoits, and cannot be relied upon as a rule, and least of all when they are most needed. The annexation of Upper Burma does not improve matters in this respect, but, on the contrary, has put an end to a curious self-acting process, by which those in Lower Burma, who were dissatisfied with terrestrial things there, went north to Upper Burma, while reciprocally northern Burmese, who found Theebaw oppressive, or rice too dear, came down the river and enjoyed the blessings of civilised rule. This interchange being at an end Lower Burma has been rather more seriously disturbed since the annexation of Upper Burma than perhaps the neighbourhood of Mandalay itself. No one hopes to see soldiers, or even police, in any considerable numbers recruited in the new territory; soldiers and police alike are provided from India, where the demand on the recruiting grounds was already in excess of the supply. The magnitude of the new obligations undertaken in the remote south-east is not diminished by the fact—geographical fact—that three sides of the vast territory occupied is surrounded by high and unhealthy and very inaccessible mountains. The tribes which inhabit them have yet to be subjugated and kept under control. These tribes are exceedingly numerous and very troublesome. "I have a very painful experience of the peoples between Eastern India and Burma," writes Sir George Campbell, respecting the hill country which constitutes one of the three mountain frontiers of Burma; "for some years a large portion of my time was occupied in dealing with them; and I desire to express my opinion that, with Burma a permanent British possession, we must eventually bring under complete control the whole of the intermediate country." The same may be said of the Shan Hills, and indeed of all the mountains on the east and north of Burma. So that we need be under no illusion as to the extent of the military requirements which will henceforth have to be provided for outside the Indian Empire, as it existed before the incorporation of Theebaw's dominions. We are not in the least surprised to find this view of the acquisition of Upper Burma set down at length, and very emphatically, in Sir George Campbell's book; for it is quite in accordance with the views set forth in these columns some two years since, as the result of very painstaking and impartial inquiry on the spot, where it was possible to see how things were and were likely to be, and to consult those best qualified to arrive at sound opinions as to the wisdom of extending the Indian frontier so far towards the Golden Chersonesus. We have at this moment, however, to consider, not the policy of that annexation to which we are now committed, but the military position in India, which that territorial acquisition has unquestionably modified.

Having indicated the broad outlines of the nature of the change which has taken place in the military situation we are in a better position to understand the bearing of the details which, though not by any means unknown to those accustomed to observe what is passing, are made readily accessible and brought into a focus in Sir George Campbell's little book. The area to be occupied and defended by the army having become enormously augmented the strain has become serious, and the means of proportionally increasing our military strength have to be taken into consideration. The Mutiny has left as one of its unwelcome legacies the distrust of a large Native army. It has been ever since an accepted axiom that whatever increase is effected in the strength of that army it must be counterbalanced by an increase in the European contingents so as to keep a proportion between the latter and the former of one to two. So long as this axiom be acted upon the question which has to be dealt with is what addition can be made to the European force? Here the first difficulty confronts us. The despatch of a corps d'armée from England reduces the Home battalions to skeletons. There is no expectation of the time arriving when any considerable addition can be permanently made to the European force in India. We may expect, therefore, that if the necessity of augmenting the army in India grows manifest and pressing, opinion will undergo a change with regard to the proportion to be observed between European and Native troops in India. The Native army will, by the force of circumstances, be enlarged probably beyond the strength which it attained in the pre-Mutiny times. This may be done with comparative safety by a due observance of obvious precautions, and the maintenance of a balance between the different constituents of which such an army must be composed. One means of maintaining the equilibrium essential to the security of the Empire is to continue the system which gives three armies, with three Commanders-in-Chief, instead of one army under one Commander-in-Chief. We have on former occasions shown that the mass of authority is overwhelmingly in favour of keeping the Indian army in water-tight compartments. The danger of enlarging the Native armies may be probably obviated. Still that does not enable us to escape other difficulties. Sir George Campbell is of opinion that the pay of the Native army must be increased. We are working them too much, we send them frequently across the sea into remote countries, and we pay them little more than was sufficient when the rate of wages and the cost of living were lower than they are now. This view is strengthened when we know that sepoy on military service are paid six rupees a month, while they see the coolies who carry their food paid ten rupees a month. The Native army is not so popular, and recruiting is by no means as easy as formerly. The warlike Sikhs take to farming, they are averse to a life of adventure, and it is difficult to recruit the Sikh regiments. It is the custom to say, especially in Bengal, that Madras has no soldiers. The taste for soldiering has died out. This can be accounted for. The same phenomenon was observed throughout Europe during the Roman peace, when the legions could only be filled by high pay, which attracted mercenaries and foreigners to the standards. The practical lesson for us is that, as Sir George Campbell says, we have to increase the pay of our Native army. And if we must increase the number, too, the expense will be heavy. How will this expense be met? Probably by the reimposition of the customs dues. The income tax was in former days considered the alternative to the custom house, and we have that already. This suggestion we present to Sir George Campbell, who states the difficulty from the financial point of view, without offering any clue to a means of escape.

The expedient which has been resorted to from time to time of supplementing the limited supply of European soldiers by drafts from India of Native troops for Imperial purposes suggests to Sir George Campbell the possibility of making use, on system, of the military material in India. Hitherto, he says, somewhat spitefully, the Government at home have resorted to the stage trick of marching a few selected regiments round and round so as to make a show, and throw dust in the eyes of the world. He thinks that a force might be raised which would be deemed considerable in Europe, if the conditions of service of the Native army were modified, with a large increase in the numbers and in the pay. He considers it dangerous to throw the whole brunt of foreign campaigning on a few selected regiments, which will grow discontented at having to bear a burden which should be shared by the whole army. Frequent sea voyages, and the garrisoning of unhealthy places which European troops cannot stand, the Native soldiers do not like. They suffer in health quite as much as Europeans, and even more. If, however, we can augment the Native army, even at the cost of a higher pay, and recruit it more largely from the robust races, it might be, as the writer says, worth our while to do it. We have often expressed this view ourselves, and are very glad to find it urged by so able an advocate. This is the day of big battalions, and when they are not to be obtained from the patriotism of the population, expressed in universal compulsory service, they must be raised by money. Where is the money to come from? Not from the Indian Treasury. We concur here, too, with our author. India, which has to remit twenty millions sterling every year to England, and has to make good the loss by exchange which represents the depreciation of the rupee, cannot afford to pay the cost of an augmented Native army, manned by robust mercenaries who have to be induced to enter the ranks by high pay, for which they are to do Imperial service wherever Imperial needs may call them. The additional charge must be borne by the Home Treasury. This would not be all a loss to the British tax-payer, for he would, as is fairly argued, in the end, save something of money and a good deal in European human material while defending the possessions of the British Crown. In other words, England may find in India the material of the big battalions which are needed for so many and such various purposes, provided she be willing to expend in this country two or three millions a year of the large sums voted for the British army. A considerable portion of that army is now paid for by India, while it is doing garrison duty in the United Kingdom. That money would be more economically laid out in improving the efficiency of the forces serving in India.

THE MAHARAJA DHULEEP SINGH.

(Statesman.)

There is a very prevalent impression, founded on Lord Dalhousie's contemporary minutes and despatches, and sedulously fostered by his colleagues and apologists, that the annexation of the Punjab was a perfectly legitimate acquisition, and that the misconduct of the Sikh administration, and the irreconcilable hostility of the Sikh chieftains and people, absolutely left the Governor-General no alternative. But every one of these pleas advanced by Lord Dalhousie, and the official or literary advocates of his policy, was based on a misrepresentation of the facts. There was no conquest of the Punjab. That country, its capital, and its chief strongholds, were already occupied by our troops under treaty, when the outbreak at Mooltan occurred, and continued so until the suppression of the rebellion. There was never any declaration of war against the Maharaja Dhuleep Singh. On the contrary, there was a public proclamation, repeated towards the close of our military operations, that they were undertaken in his behalf, and for his advantage, in accordance with our engagements. And twenty thousand of the young Maharaja's own troops fought on our side throughout the war. The Government of the Punjab was conducted by the British Resident invested with absolute power, under the Governor-General's instructions, as prescribed by the treaty; and throughout the insurrection he never had occasion to drop the reins, to leave the capital, or to relinquish the guardianship of the Maharaja. With the Resident was associated a Council of Regency, including the Gooroo, or chief pontiff of the Sikh religion. The whole of these men, with the exception of Raja Sher Singh—who was driven into reluctant hostility by the cruel injustice we did his father—behaved admirably, and in common with many other leading chieftains, gave effective and loyal assistance in putting down the rebellion.

It is hard to believe that any one at the time could, or that any one can now, have any doubt as to the injustice of our course. Its expediency at the time, and its local and Imperial consequences may be more open to question, because the problem is more complex, because, in fact, no one can demonstrate what might have been the course of events under altered circumstances. But while we can see no good results that could not have been more effectually produced in a reformed and protected State, there is much reason to trace the double source of our greatest difficulties—the Mutiny, and the Russian nightmare—mainly to the annexation of the Punjab and of Oudh. The spoliation of Oudh struck a blow at once at our moral credit, and at the homes, the sentiments, and the privileges of the sepoy. The so called conquest of the Punjab turned what the sepoys considered foreign service, with its long and costly marches, into ordinary garrison duty, while the large number of British troops locked up there left wide tracts and strategic points unguarded, and thus offered a temptation, and suggested an opportunity, to every agent of intrigue and fanaticism. With Afghanistan attached by manifest obligations, and with the Punjab and Cashmere as "buffer" States, even the foolish alarmists at Simla would have failed to get up a Russian scare. Directly or indirectly, with frontier wars, frontier defences and railways, and military expenditure generally augmented, the mutinies and the second invasion of Afghanistan must have cost India, since 1849, a hundred millions sterling. And what has been the gain? Not only was the Treaty of 1846 broken by the deposition and exile of Dhuleep Singh, during his minority, but the "terms" of abdication which we forced upon him have not been observed. Including all the successive grants and settlements made in favour of himself and his children, he never received the income he was promised under the signature and seal of the British representative. His private and personal inheritance was unwarrantably confiscated, without notice or pretext, and without reference to the treaty. Dhuleep Singh is possessed of marked ability and of many good qualities, and might have been, and he ought to have been, a capable ruler of the Punjab, an armed friend and a reforming agency. He was thrust into an unnatural position. In all probability he has been a bad steward, and may be deserving of much blame. But after having been for a brief season a sort of Oriental pet at Court, and having tried in vain for many years to keep pace, as he was incited and encouraged to do, with English Princes and nobles, the resources of an inadequate income gave way, and his downward course began. The progressive comprehension and development of his wrongs did its work by degrees. The Christianity which he was induced to profess in his childhood was abandoned, and he reappears now as a Sikh, no longer a picturesque object in the pageantry of St. James's. The transformation of Her Majesty's former ally and ward into a disaffected loungeur on the Boulevards, or a refugee at the Russian Court, is not a nice spectacle. It says little for the political insight, or for the tact of the India Office, the Cabinet, or the Court, that such a spectacle should have been presented to Europe, or that it should be allowed to continue a day.

THE INDIAN COMMISSARIAT.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Nothing short of a radical change in the present system of officering the Department will ever be of much use. The separate Transport branch, predicted and found to be such an expensive failure, has again been merged in the Commissariat, and the period of probation for officers has been extended to five years. But there remains a great deal to be done before regimental officers will be induced to come forward in any number to fill vacancies in the Department. It goes without saying, too, that it is not every regimental officer who can command a company—that is, fitted to undertake the duties and responsibilities of an executive Commissariat officer. What is required is selection, and for this to be feasible there must be a sufficient number of applicants to select from. It will only be by enhancing the attraction of the Department that anything like competition will be engendered, particularly now that the prospects of Bengal regimental officers have materially improved, owing to the withdrawal of numbers to fill the regiments recently created. The emoluments we think are far too low in the lower grades, and we would propose, instead of the present system of rank and Staff pay, that pay in a consolidated form as obtains in most Civil Departments should be introduced. The salaries of the administrative appointments might remain as they now are. Another point, and one which we think deserving of attention, is that officers should be appointed to stations and allowed to remain there at least three years, and not be driven about the country as frequently as they now are—entailing expense to them, which Government does not in any way recoup them for. If this system of "general post" is a necessity, then extra allowances should be permitted. Again, greater facilities ought to be afforded officers of the Department in obtaining privilege leave. Further, as a means of procuring officers for the Department, we would note the fact, that there are many officers in British regiments whom nothing will induce to go into Native regiments; but who, were the opportunity of obtaining billets in the Military Department offered them, would be only too willing to accept them. We propose, in regard to them, that they should be allowed to join the Department on passing the higher standard and the preliminary examination for entrance to the Department, and that they should be retained on the strength of their corps until they were permanently appointed to the Department and the Staff Corps, which would be at one and the same time; thus dispensing with the drill portion of the examination which Staff Corps probationers have to pass, and which would be of no practical use to them. Another point, and one which we believe is now under the consideration of Government, is that officers, on being permanently appointed to the Department, should have the local rank of captain conferred on them until such time as they attained that rank as officers of the Staff Corps.

PONDICHERY STEAM PRESSED GROUND NUT OIL.

(Madras Mail.)

The comparatively sudden development of the ground nut traffic in Southern India has opened out markets for the oil which but a few years ago were not dreamt of, and Pondicherry has, from the early beginning of the oil trade, taken the lead in the Indian export markets. Last year's crushing operations were restricted, owing to the unusually high price of the nut, caused by a heavy export demand throughout the whole season, and also by a decreased supply arising from inundation damages to the crops. In 1884, the total crop was estimated at upwards of 80,000 tons. Nearly 70,000 tons were exported in bulk and in oil from Pondicherry alone, and this year's yield is expected to exceed 100,000 tons, about nine-tenths of which will probably find its way to Pondicherry. Just now, however, there is a depression in the trade, in consequence of the exceptionally low quotations at Marseilles; still, there are buyers at growers' prices—mostly, as yet, for crushing and for shipment in shells to Coast ports, Calcutta, Burma and the Straits. It is calculated that, at Rs. 10 per candy at the place of growth, cultivators can realise a fair profit, so that, at the present rate of Rs. 16-12-0 per candy, either the producers, or "middle men," or both, must be making extravagant profits. Last year the price touched Rs. 22, and kept at above Rs. 20 for the greater part of the season. The rapid development of the ground nut industry is traceable, in a great measure to the comparatively easy method of cultivation. Beyond the sowing and gathering of the crop there is nothing to be done; it requires no watering, and needs no tending, and, as the coolies who collect the nuts are paid in kind, the capital outlay is limited to the mere cost of labour for scattering the seed. Within the last year or two, and notably from the beginning of the present year, nearly all the eastern coast ports and Calcutta, Rangoon, Moulmein, and the Straits, have been regular buyers of the Pondicherry oil; even at the current high rate of the nut, it can be manufactured and sold at about one rupee per imperial gallon. The ground nut oil trade is as yet but in its infancy, and the cheapness and purity of the article, together with its unquestioned general usefulness as a cuisine commodity, must cause a steadily increasing demand for it.

THE HINDU KUSH PASSES.

(Pioneer.)

We thought that the fiction about the "easy passes" over the Hindu Kush, north of Kafiristan, Chitral, and Yassin had been exploded, but we still find writers at home dwelling upon the advantages offered by the Dora and Baroghil routes. Thus Major-General de Berry, in an article published in a military magazine, assures his readers that "all the main passes are fairly easy; the limit of time for which they are open depends on their altitude. The Baroghil is nearly always open, its altitude is rather below 12,000 feet sea level. The Dora (? Dora), also easy, is higher." These ideas of the heights and general character of the Hindu Kush passes are all out of date. The latest information on the subject is contained in the report of Colonel Lockhart's Mission, which thoroughly examined the great range from the Kilik Pass on the east to the Dora on the west. This report has not yet been published, but, as is well known in India at least, the explorations showed that the passage of any but very small bodies of men over the various passes is impossible. Snow was found lying on the Baroghil at midsummer, and so dangerous was the roads that the ponies of the party had to be abandoned, and some Baltistan coolies actually lost their lives. The Dora was nearly as bad. We have once or twice before corrected the false impressions which prevail in England regarding these Hindu Kush passes, and it is necessary to repeat the correction, as would-be Central Asian experts are constantly dwelling upon the vulnerability of Kashmir from the Pamir direction. This is only putting public opinion on a false scent. If ever Russia makes her grand move eastwards towards India, she will not fritter away her men among the snows of the eastern Hindu Kush, but will make a supreme effort to turn the western end of the range at Herat and force the comparatively easy passes in the centre which lead direct to Kabul itself. The route taken by Sir West Ridgway from the Oxus to the Kabul River is the one to which attention should be directed, for in this direction the Hindu Kush can be crossed by an army of some strength during the summer months. Russian writers fully recognise the great advantages of an advance from Balkh, with a base in Afghanistan perfectly secure, and with Kabul as the objective point, the Afghan capital being only 160 miles by road from our outpost at Jamrud Fort. A Russian General would dare much and sacrifice much even to threaten Kabul: he would not, on the other hand, venture far in the wild and barren mountainous country between Kashmir and Kafiristan where starvation would stare his troops in the face after the first week's march. We are not now calculating the chances of Russian success if the Czar's troops ever cross or turn the Hindu Kush: our only aim is to show the direction in which the advance may be made with the most advantage to an invading army, and this is certainly not by way of any of the eastern passes such as the Dora and the Baroghil.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF UPPER BURMA.

The Mandalay Herald considers that the most pressing need for Upper Burma is the immigration of an industrious class into the province:—

It advances as arguments for this course that, so far as its mineral wealth is concerned, this upper province is known to be rich in gold and precious stones, its forests are the richest and of greater area than any others in the known world; and it is admitted, by those competent to express their opinion, that the soil of Burma in its many different phases of situation and altitude is capable of producing almost any agricultural produce, from potatoes to tea. With such practically unlimited resources there must, in the natural order of things mundane, be some drawback, and that drawback is, in the case of Burma, the sparsity of the population, a remedy for which becomes one of the clearest duties of an enlightened Government. It is difficult to comprehend how Burma, bounded as it is on each side by countries teeming with population, should possess in itself a population of only something like forty-eight souls per square mile, i.e., if the latest census reports available for the lower province may be accepted as applying with equal truth to the whole of Burma—a thing we doubt greatly. The Government must attempt to induce cultivators and others to come to this province and to develop its natural resources. In doing this, there is one point which it would be well to bear in mind, and that is, that the more varied the population becomes in the matter of races and creeds, so much greater will be the peace and security of the country at large. With his known readiness to go anywhere that opportunity offers of making money, we may take it for granted that no long interval will elapse before the Chinese immigrant becomes a very powerful factor in the population of this province; and, though the Chinese are known to be a peaceful and law abiding race under British rule, there would exist some element of danger in the fact of the Chinese element becoming the greatest of the total population. This, of course, applies most nearly when it is remembered that we now have China as our next neighbour, and in the event of any complications arising between that country and ourselves the presence of a preponderating Chinese element in our commonwealth would be, at any rate, a source of considerable disquietude and anxiety. The fact is patent that our chief want is population. Let the Government offer liberal inducements to the cultivators of Bengal, Assam and India generally, and we should shortly have the country smiling under cultivation, its mineral resources developed, and its revenue increased; and in the last result we have probably given the reason which will act most powerfully with the Government. Increased population means increased national wealth and prosperity, and it is the developing of these which has always been the first and chief duty of the British Government.

BENGAL.

A SECOND and revised edition of objects of antiquarian interest in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, compiled from official records and other sources, has recently been published by the Government of Bengal. The first edition was printed in 1879. The present volume has been prepared by the Public Works Department of the Government, assisted by Mr. J. D. Beglar, Archaeological Surveyor in Bengal.

Advices from Behar continue satisfactory regarding the indigo prospects, and the plant is said to be everywhere looking healthy, some rain being all that is wanted to secure a full crop. One or two factories in Champaran and the south of Tirhoot have had slight showers of rain, but more would be acceptable. Some rain has also fallen in the Bhagalpur, Jessore, and Midnapur districts, which has improved the prospects there, but throughout the rest of Bengal the reports are not so satisfactory, and in several places the plant is reported to be suffering considerably from drought. The accounts from Benares and the North-West Provinces are, on the whole, favourable.

THE hearing of the Budwan adoption case was resumed May 17 at the Board of Revenue, Calcutta before Mr. Halliday alone; Mr. Beames being absent from indisposition. Mr. Woodroffe having concluded his arguments on behalf of the Dowager Maharani, Mr. Pugh followed on the same side, chiefly repeating Mr. Woodroffe's line of argument, but adding that all the decisions in the Panjab records in favour of the adoption of the sons of daughters or sisters was incorrect. Mr. Pugh concluded his remarks about three o'clock, when it was suggested that if Mr. Halliday had no objection the case should be adjourned till the following morning, by which time it was hoped that Mr. Beames would have recovered, so that the arguments of the Advocate-General on behalf of the Maharani might be heard before both Members of the Board.

MADRAS.

It is notified in the last Madras Gazette that the Birthday Ball was to be held at Ootacamund on the 24th May, all public offices being closed that day. The 20th June will also be observed as a holiday in the Madras Presidency.

THE leading Hindu gentlemen of Bangalore have formed a committee for promoting secular zenana education there. A European lady and a high caste Hindu lady have been engaged as teachers. The curriculum includes, it is said, Tamil, English, reading, writing, arithmetic, history, geography and needlework.

THE reductions sanctioned a short time ago by the Madras Government in the allowances for subordinates drawing only small salaries for their journeys to the hills, have proved so excessive that a number of them petitioned the Government on the subject. On investigation it appeared that their complaints were well founded, and an increase has now been sanctioned, commencing with Rs. 15 a month, and rising to Rs. 100 a month.

BOMBAY.

THE Port Officer at Aden has been appointed Surveyor for that port.

CAPTAIN W. J. LISTER, R.E., has been appointed to act as Executive Engineer of Aden.

MR. A. S. BULKLEY will act as Survey and Settlement Commissioner from June 1st.

MR. T. D. LITTLE, M. Inst. C.E., on return from furlough, will be the Executive Engineer, Khandaish.

As a temporary measure Colonel A. T. Mander, R.E., will act as Superintending Engineer, N.D., vice Colonel W. M. Ducat.

MR. J. H. E. HART, in addition to his duties of Chief Engineer of Irrigation, will act as Superintending Engineer, C.D.

MR. W. ALLEN, C.S., will act as collector of Sholapore, and Mr. H. E. Winter, C.S., will occupy a similar post at Broach.

MAJOR E. V. STACE will act as Joint Administrator of Sangli during the absence of Lieutenant-Colonel W. A. Salmon.

MR. H. J. H. HENDERSON and Captain E. F. Marriott will act as District Superintendents of Police, of Nasik and Surat, respectively.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL J. RUTHERFORD, Deputy Superintendent, Mysore Revenue Survey, has been granted six months' furlough to Europe.

THE services of Mr. C. E. S. Steele have been placed at the disposal of the Commissioner in Sind, for employment as Manager of the Encumbered States in Sind, vice Mr. Jenkins.

MR. C. H. JOPP, Assistant Judge and Sessions Judge, Satara, has been allowed furlough for four months and seven days. Mr. T. J. Hamilton will act for him.

MR. J. B. W. BIDDLE and Mr. E. F. Green have been appointed to do duty as Assistant Superintendents of Police, on probation, at Ahmedabad and Khandeish.

MR. J. H. GRANT, C.S., Collector of Land Revenue and Customs, Bombay, is gazetted one year's furlough. Mr. J. McLeod Campbell, C.S., has been appointed in his place.

CAPTAIN H. D. ROSSETER, 2nd Battalion, Durham Light Infantry, has been appointed Inspector and Adjutant of the Great Indian Peninsular Railway Volunteer Corps, vice Captain G. E. Even, resigned.

DURING the absence of Brigade-Surgeon A. N. Hojel, Brigade-Surgeon H. V. Carter, M.D., will act as Physician of the European General Hospital, in addition to his other duties.

THE season report for the past week states that there has been more or less rain in parts of thirteen districts. Lands being prepared for kharif cultivation everywhere, and early kharif sowing commenced in parts of five districts. Fever and cattle disease in parts of ten, small-pox in parts of eight, and cholera in parts of four districts.

DR. J. W. TYLER, C.I.E., has proceeded to Europe by mail steamer in charge of H. H. the Maharaja of Bhurpore's deputation, which is to take part in the celebration of the Imperial Jubilee. The deputation consisted of the following four Sirdars:—Colonel Gungabush, Captain Raghunath Sing, Captain Pundit Kirthakissen, and Lala Nawab Sing.

ON May 20th a large number of Parsee and Hindoo liquor shopkeepers of Bombay and others assembled at the Apollo Bunder to bid farewell to Mr. John Hay Grant, C.S., the Collector of Land Revenue and Customs, who proceeded to Europe on furlough, for twelve months, by Friday's overland mail steamer. Having delivered over charge of his office to his successor, Mr. J. McLeod Campbell, early in the day, Mr. Grant drove to the Yacht Club, where he took tiffin with some of his friends. A little after half-past three o'clock, the whole of the office establishment of the Collector of Land Revenue, and Inspectors of the Abkari Department were at the bunder to see the last of their departing superior, who was held in high esteem by all his subordinates.

Now that Peshin has been opened out by the railway, and its strategic value from a military point of view consequently increased a hundred-fold, a contemporary urges the desirability of paying attention to the development of its natural resources.

THE gathering of rebel Tarakhis about Ghazni is reported to have dispersed. Ghulam Haider Orakzai has safely joined his father, Sikander Khan, at Maruf. A similar proclamation to that issued by the Ameer at Kandahar is issued at Ghazni, denouncing the Nassiri, Tarakhis, Hotaks and Kakars as outlaws.

A CORRESPONDENT to the Asian tells a story of school-boy examination that fairly caps any contained in Mark Twain's lately published list. The question was: "Who was Esau, and what was a remarkable incident in his life?" Answer: "Esau wrote a very famous book of fables, and he sold the copyright of them for a bottle of potash."

It may be within the knowledge of our readers, writes the Allahabad paper, that Mr. J. Beames, of the Civil Service of the Lower Provinces, has lately been the subject of a series of charges affecting his character as a public servant, brought against him by the Native Press avowedly in return for his anti-native evidence before the Public Service Commission. Mr. Beames, in consequence of these accusations, tendered a written explanation to the local Government, which that Government pronounced satisfactory, and passed on to the Government of India. The Government of India is also understood to have declared itself satisfied. All that we can say then is, that they have no business to be anything of the sort. If a public servant has been insulted and libelled before the world in his capacity as a public servant, it is absurd to say that justice is done and the question closed by a Secretariat admission of his integrity. There can be no satisfaction about the matter until the offending paper is brought to book. Unless the Government will take steps on behalf of Mr. Beames, or, through him, to institute a prosecution, their attitude will be about as satisfactory as Mr. Parnell's towards the Times.

CHINA'S SOURCES OF INCOME AND HER CREDIT.*

The issue through German, instead of through English, financiers and capitalists, of the late Chinese loan, is an event, the importance of which it is as difficult to overrate as it is to forecast its ultimate significance. The English have been decisively beaten on their own ground. The terms for the loan originally offered by the Chinese (and enhanced, it is stated, in the course of the negotiations) are understood to have been by no means illiberal. Yet the representatives of the London money market "would have none of it." True to English traditions, they underrated the strength and the pertinacity of the adversary; and, with deplorable shortsightedness, ignored the probability of the loan going into a foreign market, leaving out of view the obvious consequences of such an occurrence. London, and London alone, had always been the centre of Chinese commercial transactions in Europe; therefore, Inshalla, it should ever be so. What might have been foreseen occurred; the conditions which our capitalists had refused were grasped with both hands by German financiers. Thus, Dollar being King everywhere, and financial power being the best pioneer for influence of all kinds, has British commercial prestige received a regrettable check. We should not be surprised if Mr. Boulger have somewhat of a trenchant character to say on this subject in the next Asiatic Quarterly.

Naturally, the Germans, having already gained a predominant position of influence in Japan, are exultant at this second victory over us; they, at least, were not slow to recognise that, the wedge having once been introduced, it has but to be driven home to secure for them a firm foothold; that is, in the present case, a great, if not a preponderating, influence in the most important Empire of the Far East. That they are fully alive to the advantage which they have gained by their promptitude in occupying a field of commercial enterprise of which our capitalists had at one time had exclusive possession, and which it would well have repaid them, even in the absence of very large immediate profits, to have retained against all comers, Mr. Exner's pamphlet shows. It is the reprint of a lecture addressed by him, just a month ago, to the Central Institute for Commercial Geography at Berlin; and deals, properly enough, in the first instance, with the various sources of the revenue of the Celestial Empire. Of these Mr. Exner, who was for some time German Assessor in the Consular Court at Tientsin, speaks after careful local inquiry. Yet he is constrained, while roughly putting Chinese revenue at 65 million taels or 16½ million sterling, to our that his estimates of all its sources, except that for the sea customs, which averaged 3½ millions sterling, and are collected under English supervision, are the merest crudities. It is the revenue from the sea customs, and this alone (p. 33), which can in his eyes furnish tangible security for the future loans henceforth to be "placed" in the Fatherland (p. 48).

There cannot be two kings in Brentford, and assuredly there cannot be two foreign Powers holding paramount influence in China. Mr. Exner, laudably desirous to utilise the lately contracted loan as a means of pushing German commerce, suggests the establishment in China of German banks and insurance companies, and points significantly to the great advantage which Germany enjoys at Peking in the presence there of a representative (Herr Von Brandt), who is not only the doyen of the Ambassadorial Corps, but who, having resided at the Chinese capital for twenty years, stands on a better footing with Celestial officialdom than "the so frequently changing envoys of other States." (P. 37.) We cannot sufficiently regret the causes which prevented Sir Robert Hart—a persona gratissima—from permanently undertaking the duties of British Minister at Peking. If, as we do not doubt, the present Envoy (to find whom the Foreign Office took eighteen months, during which time the Peking Embassy was vacant) is a really efficient representative, it is devoutly to be hoped that the Foreign Office will let him remain long enough to do something more than merely get comfortably warm in his present berth before they send him—let us say to Timbuctoo or—to some place where his experience of China and the Chinese will be utterly thrown away, or be worse than useless.

Mr. Exner winds up his book, which ought to have, as an alternative title, "How to undermine English influence in the Far East," by a few words (pp. 60-71) on the proposal to found a German bank in Japan; and, as connected with this project (which he is not prepared to recommend for early adoption) gives some readable facts concerning Japanese commerce.

THE NATION IN ARMS.*

Thanks to the circumstance that this country is girt with the "silver streak," many of the military problems which perplex and harass other nations have no concern for the people of England. Huge armies recruited by conscription—the curse and the drain of the Continental nations—are not necessary. All—admitted it is a large all—that is necessary is that Great Britain should retain the mastery of the seas, and that she should have a sufficient army to strike with effect in any given quarter; more than this would be hopeless and impossible. But though we can contemplate the tactics of war from a calm and comparatively secure standpoint, it behoves the people of England to take good stock of their position, and bestir themselves that all that can and should be done has been accomplished.

And to this purpose Baron von der Goltz's "Nation In Arms" will stand them in good stead. It is a perfect mine of ingenious suggestions, of careful essays, and of elaborate schemes; not a detail of the subject has been omitted, not an item overlooked. All the modern systems of tactics, torpedoes, fortresses, railways, and the like, find a place in the several chapters which relate to such topics; but what, to the thoughtful reader, will add an additional charm, is that the art of war is treated logically and with profound sagacity. All the dicta of the world's greatest generals are put into the crucible of examination, and made to stand the test of proof. Nothing is taken for granted—nothing is accepted because of the high authority with which it has come down to mankind at large—nothing is adopted unless it is proved sound and trustworthy, and the result reveals some startling effects. Were some of the great commanders of the world's history to come again to life, it is not too much to say that they would have to begin afresh the lesson of life; nay, indeed, well-nigh all their notions of fighting would be found utterly obsolete, and unsuited to modern requirements—some worthless, others positively fraught with danger. There is much in this volume to astonish: there is one matter which should please. We allude to the dictum that "descents on the coast are, accordingly, in the case of a populous state, with a good military organisation, rather bugbears than real dangers." Well for England that it is so. The knowledge of this should give her confidence, though there is a fear lest it should induce effeminate indolence, or promote indifference to the due protection of our domains.

It is seldom that a military author writes with such an utter absence of technicality and abstruseness as does Baron von der Goltz. He who runs may read, and that many will avail themselves of the privilege must be the hope of all who wish well for their country, and also desire to see her strong, prepared, and ready to strike when her honour is insulted, or her interests assailed.

THE AGRICULTURAL PESTS OF INDIA AND OF EASTERN AND SOUTHERN ASIA.†

In 1885 Dr. Balfour, the indefatigable author of that marvel of Oriental knowledge, the "Cyclopædia of India," suggested to the India Office authorities the expediency of requiring annual reports, describing "the insects which injure the agricultural, horticultural, and forest produce of India, suggesting means of preventing, and remedies." These reports, the writer thought, should be restricted to the injurious insects, and he referred to the valuable experience acquired by Miss Ormerod (who, as is well known, annually reports, as to this country, on the injurious insects prevalent, and the means of checking their ravages) as supplying hints for the procedure to be followed. The advice seems to have been taken; and some valuable suggestions, by the lady entomologist referred to, were communicated to the Government of India.

The amount of damage sustained by the Indian cultivator may be in some degree inferred from occurrences which took place a few years back in Ceylon, where the produce of the coffee crop was, in a few seasons, reduced, by insect ravages, from 4½ cwt. per acre to less than 2½ cwt., or by more than one half; the total loss being estimated at fifteen millions sterling in ten years. To turn to the cotton crop in India, the value of which is roughly put at seven crores of rupees annually, we are told by the United States Agricultural Commissioner that, in parts of India "one fourth of the value of the cotton crop is sometimes lost from the ravages of the larvae of one insect."

Pending fuller inquiry, Dr. Balfour has deemed it well to collect, for present information, what is already on record respecting Indian agricultural pests of all kinds, with especial advertence to insects and fungi. Besides adopting the alphabetical form of arrangement—assuredly the best where so many facts have to be marshalled under various heads, as regards the "pests" themselves, the author has enhanced the value of the little work by naming, under the appropriate heading, the principal enemies of each crop. Thus, under "coffee" we find (p. 43) a list of no less than twenty-seven foes against whom watch and ward ought to be kept on behalf of this important, yet delicate and vulnerable object of cultivation. Wheat, at p. 113, poppy and rice (pp. 93 and 99), silk, tea with its table adjunct, sugar, (pp. 101 to 109), are in turn duly dealt with, their many foes while in a growing state being enumerated, and the means of prevention indicated. A chief measure of protection seems to be, in India as here, a frequent change of crops. As the author well reminds us, "Each insect species has its own particular plants, on which alone it lives, and, when deprived of food by a change in cultivation, they die." Certain crops, too, have a direct effect in killing off certain tribes of "pests." But something more than this method of procedure—at best but partially applicable in India—seems to be needed; nor will washings or syringings, such as those suggested as a pis aller in the introduction, suffice to combat the enormous fecundity of the insect world. When we read that, even in Europe, five generations proceeding from a single aphid (plant-lice) reach the number of six thousand millions, we may well despair of realising the magnitude of the evil with which we have to cope. Nature has, however, been by no means niggardly in according us help: and Dr. Balfour, in giving the fullest particulars as to the enemies which beset each insect tribe, and which may be taken as being nature's appointed means of combating its ravages, has indicated a weapon which ought not to be allowed to rust. He has succeeded in compressing, within the compass of 120 pages, adequately, full, and wholly trustworthy details respecting insects, reptiles, and mammals injurious to man and his products, and has added yet another to the many obligations under which he has laid all who are interested in the welfare of India, and the prosperity of its agriculture.

"Avernus!"—yes, indeed! No other word less significant and forcible would describe the utter "hell upon earth" which is the daily life of those restless spirits who, too unsettled for the monotony of the mother-country, betake themselves to scenes across the Atlantic, and "rough it" in the wilds of America. It could be wished that "The Western Avernus" were in the hands of the many who, young in heart and hopeful in enthusiasm, look forward to a life of adventures as freedom from bondage and emancipation from thralldom—who picture the wild pleasures of camping under the canopy of heaven, with no one to disturb their cogitations or interfere with their plans, who jump at the prospect of free, unrestrained licence and unfettered freedom. Let them read Mr. Morley Roberts's experiences—a plain, unsophisticated account of his wanderings and troubles. Why, the blood curdles in the veins at the mere thought of the hardships he underwent, the toils, the anxieties, the dangers when he had to face at every turn. A walk of 25 miles with nothing to eat but a pound of dry biscuits, a trudge of 15 miles before breakfast can be procured—and this is supposing the thing be forthcoming at the end of the journey—steaks cut off fly-blown meat!—sleeping in the open amidst rotten hay and damp, nay, wet sticks, on bare boards, in doorways, on piles of potatoes, in railway trucks, tramping the streets homeless, without shelter or food—such is a catalogue of troubles which drove many a wanderer to commit suicide. Then there are deaths from starvation, deaths by violence, to swell the awful total of human beings swept away to that "bourne from which no traveller returns."

No—a thousand times no. Let young people bear the ills they have patiently; let them avoid the fatal error of supposing that all abroad is but a succession of daily "pic nics," of which the "roughing it" constitutes the principal pleasure. Let them read "Western Avernus," and when they put it down feel they have learned a lesson of life from a book which bears the impress of truth, which does not seem to magnify evils for the sake of effect or sensation, and which, by narrating the experiences of "one who knows," may, it is devoutly hoped, protect many an unwary youth, who "not knowing," might err from ignorance and be led astray through want of advice.

THE RECORDS OF THE INDIA OFFICE.

NOT too soon, but certainly not the less welcome, comes to hand the first part of a volume which cannot fail to be of value to all who take an interest in the history which tells of how British power rose and grew in the East. The paper in question is a "Report to the Secretary of State for India in Council on the Records of the India Office," which has been compiled by Mr. F. C. Danvers, the Registrar, and Superintendent of Records. Brought out under authority and under such supervision the papers which will now be given to the public will be of the greatest use to students and historians, and should be of deep interest to all Englishmen who take a pride in the growth and glory of the English Empire.

It has been said that the literary records which the world has lost in earlier times were of greater value than many which the world has been careful to preserve since. But this was probably the sentiment of some mouldy antiquarian, who, jealous of the glories of the present, sighed for the good old times of which he knew nothing about. The countless treasures of historic lore said to have been lost in the burning of the most ancient of libraries, have been lamented by poet and philosopher, who were still in sublime ignorance of any catalogue of such treasures. The greater part of the treasures mourned for may have been veritable rubbish, which the charity of time or fire did well to hurry into oblivion. Yet the sentiment of regret which has taken hold of cultured minds for successive ages can be easily understood, but it is difficult to comprehend why, when coming to later days, the lesson which that sentiment conveyed should be so little regarded. The neglect of the ancient keepers of old records, which was punished by the loss of their most cherished treasures, ought not to have been a complaint against modern librarians and registrars. But it remains so. And in the introduction to the volume which Mr. Danvers has just brought out, he tells a strange story of how a part of history in connection with the foundation of English influence in India has been lost beyond recall. It would be interesting, indeed, to read copies of the first letters sent by the East India Company to their several agents abroad, but of these no trace can be found, although it can hardly be doubted that such were made. But at a Court of Committees held on the 6th July, 1607, "it was thought fitt that all letters from and to India and all answers thereof be entered into a book and coated for future memorie as occasion may fall out." This was confirmed by a resolution two years afterwards, when "Francis Sadler was admitted and sworn servant of the Company for the registering of sundry letters and other writings fit to be coated, registered and kept for the use of the Company." Notwithstanding these rules not more than fourteen documents of the correspondence of the Company previous to 1610 are forthcoming. But even after this date, letters, books and journals, and even minutes of the Court, were lost by lending or otherwise, past recovery, and it was not until 1835 that the deficiencies in the Company's records were brought prominently to notice and an attempt made to account for them. "Hitherto," says Mr. Danvers, "I have referred only to deficiencies in the records caused by accident, carelessness, or unforeseen circumstances; but it is to be feared that other deficiencies have been caused by deliberate destruction without due care and discrimination." This he explains by telling a story of official action which reads to-day as a most extraordinary narrative. In 1858 the Registrar brought to notice that there existed a quantity of miscellaneous papers belonging to the Secretary's office which had been accumulating for a period of thirty years, "which neither are, nor ever could be," so writes this intelligent custodian, "of any use whatever," together with "a quantity of Warehouse Books and Documents of a miscellaneous character, such as sale books, appearance books, catalogues, &c., not any of which have been referred to during the past twenty years." These were accordingly ordered to be sold, and over twenty-one tons of such documents were disposed of as waste paper, realising the sum of £158 0s. 10d.

Surely here is food for the commentator, critic or historian! But there appears to have been then a very rage for the destruction or sweeping away of the old papers of the East India Company. In 1859, in consequence of the Store-Keeper General being short of room, thirty-one cart-loads, comprising in all about 20,000 volumes, were removed from New-street, where they had been kept, and after a brief sojourn in the cellars in Leadenhall-street were, for the most part, again sold as waste paper! But this was not all. In 1860 Sir Charles Wood, then Secretary of State for India, gave directions that all "useless" records in the India Office in Cannon-road and Leadenhall-street were to be destroyed or otherwise disposed of previous to the removal of the office to Victoria-street. Under these directions upwards of three hundred tons of books and papers were sold as waste, realising a total of £3,095 16s., which no doubt the soul of one who was also a Chancellor of the Exchequer better appreciated than musty tomes. In 1867, on the removal of the India Office to its present abode, a further destruction of books and papers was made, "also on an extended scale." In 1877 and following years no destruction took place except after careful selection by the Record Department and under confirmation of the Council.

Of course the greater part of what was destroyed was, perhaps, rightly so treated, as there must have been heaps of papers, books, &c., which it could have been of no interest or advantage to keep. But, and the authority we quote is Mr. Danvers himself, "it is much to be feared that, in the endeavour to get rid of only useless records, those destroyed—especially in the earlier years of destruction—had not been sufficiently examined before being condemned, and that thus documents of historical interest shared the fate of others which had ceased to possess any sufficient value to justify their preservation." And then there follows another very grave statement from the same authority:—"At no time hitherto does there appear to have been undertaken a critical examination and comparison of the Records of this Office, such as would enable them to be properly classified and put away in systematic order. Indeed, up to the present time there exist volumes of which no record has ever been made, so that in the event of their being lost no evidence would be forthcoming that they had ever existed."

This is a very serious and hardly creditable state of things, and we wish that Mr. Danvers could have stated where the blame for it ought to rest. It may be almost be taken for granted that he would not point in the direction of the India Office itself; can it be that the censure lies nearer to the Treasury Office in grudging a sufficient sum to carry out a work of really national importance? We shall have to pause long, perhaps, for a reply, but it is satisfactory to learn that a critical examination of all the Records in the India Office is now being made, and that the work is well advanced. The first result has been the production of the volume now before us, whose interesting and varied contents we shall treat of in a future issue of this paper.

AVE IMPERATRIX!

Hail to the high-born dame
Who, in her girlhood, came To be our Queen!

May she accept our praise
Hearing the vows we raise;
Honour and length of days
Wait on our Queen!

Oft as the morning gun
Roars to the rising sun
Gilding the scene,
Ranked on the Birman shore,
Frost-bound in Labrador,
East and West, all implore Health to the Queen!

Heard where the Hebrides
Loom o'er the stormy seas,
Heard where the green
Fringes the groves of palm
Bathed in the tropic calm,
Echo repeats the psalm—
"God save the Queen!"

Thus through the world's extent
On her our loves are bent Greeting our Queen;

May she her State increase,
Make our contentions cease,
Still give us joy and peace,
GOD SAVE THE QUEEN!

NOTES FROM CABUL.

The following interesting notes about affairs in Afghanistan are from a Bombay gentleman who has now been a resident in that country for some years:—

I find from the papers that all India is just now in a ferment of excitement over the revolt of the Ghilzais. People in India seem to fear that the revolt is still spreading, and has assumed such serious proportions as to jeopardise the safety of the Ameer's throne. Even speculations are rife about the intention of the Government of India to send troops to Afghanistan with the object of quelling the disturbance and restoring peace to the country. From what I know of Abdur Rahman, I doubt very much whether he would at all look with favour upon such an intervention in his behalf; and I doubt still more whether any foreign aid is necessary. While distance, and what is more, a complete want of reliable information, have invested the disturbance with vague terrors, the Ameer goes, as usual, on his daily round of toil without allowing his mind or his spirits to be ruffled in any considerable degree by the rising of the disaffected tribe. What appears to have alarmed some of you is the report that Gulam Hyder Khan, the Commander-in-Chief of the Afghan army, has been defeated and slain by the Ghilzais. I lately saw myself the Commander-in-Chief hale and hearty in Jellalabad, where he has taken up his quarters in the British camp. He was sent there a few days before the arrival of the Boundary Commission in Cabul to put down the rising of the Shinwarris and the Lagmanis. The General who has been sent against the Ghilzais bears the same name; hence the mistake. But I am not quite sure even of this man's death.

The original cause of the disaffection among the Ghilzais is to be traced to an increase in the taxes levied from them. It was about the time when their minds were burning with deep resentment owing to this cause that the members of the Boundary Commission arrived in Cabul, where they were very hospitably received on behalf of the Ameer. His Highness, who had gone on a tour in the lovely district of Kohistan, returned to his capital two days after the arrival of the Commission. Two of his sons had gone away on a hunting expedition to Logur, and, as I have already stated, Gulam Hyder Khan was at the time in Jellalabad. The absence of all these distinguished personages from Cabul at the time of the Commission's arrival gave rise to a report which was industriously circulated among the disaffected tribes that the Ameer, his sons, and his Sapah Salar, had fled away, leaving free and independent Afghanistan in the hands of Kaffirs. We know how the wildest and most extravagant rumours gain implicit credence among orientals; and in this case the Ghilzais were led by a story of this character to give vent to their disaffection by the familiar and, with them, constitutional mode of a revolt. The Ghilzais were defeated by the Ameer's troops last year, and by way of an acceptable present 250 heads of the rebels were sent to his Highness, who forthwith raised a mud tower, called Kalle minar, the minaret of heads, from the fact of its being adorned with these ghastly trophies of victory. Another such memorial of retributive justice stands in Jellalabad; but the terrible warning sought to be conveyed by these monuments does not seem to have greatly impressed the Afghans. The Ghilzai revolt is now simmering, and it may die out soon. But the Ameer is blessed with too many cousins, for his peace and security, and what form their machinations may some day take is a subject which opens up a vista of possibilities, which, being still mere possibilities in the abstract, it is idle at present to contemplate.

The mind of Abdur Rahman does not appear to be sorely troubled by this revolt, as may appear from the pamphlet—I suppose you call it "Yellow Pamphlet"—which he has found time to indite and publish on the day of the Bakri 'Id festival in September last. If this pamphlet proves anything, it proves that Abdur Rahman is a firm ally of the English. Beside the evidence which this publication gives of his animosity to Russia, I may say that he has issued positive orders among his courtiers never to make use of the Russian language even in ordinary conversation. Self-interest is as strong a motive for friendship as for enmity, and in his pamphlet the Ameer seeks to prove that it is to his self-interest that he should ally himself with England rather than with Russia. If he were to give the Russians a passage through his territory to go to India, and supposing, for a moment, that their arms should prove victorious, the Ameer is convinced that the next step of the conquerors would be an invasion of his own territory, assisted by Wali Mahomed and other disaffected Afghan refugees. Sher Ali was a fool to have coveted a Russian alliance, and Yakoob Khan was a still greater fool in having allowed the presence of an Englishman as the British envoy at Cabul. He ought to have known what bitter hatred the people have of all Kaffirs, and should have asked, as Abdur Rahman had in his wisdom done, for a Mahomedan envoy.

The Ameer seems to feel very keenly the loss of Penjdeh, and is deeply sorry that he was dissuaded by General Lumsden from maintaining, if necessary by the sword, Afghan interests against the claims put forward by Russia. The Ameer has by no means an over-modest opinion of his own strength and resources, and is quite confident that if he had had an opportunity of meeting the Russians, he would have taught them a bitter lesson, and Penjdeh would have been saved to him. His Highness allows that General Lumsden may be a good soldier worthy of the high office he holds; but he was lacking in the statesmanship which had enabled his Highness to suggest the means which would have averted the loss of Penjdeh. The Royal author concludes his production with this observation:—"If, after what I have written above, anybody were to say that the Afghans are the friends of Russia, he would simply be telling a lie."

ROHILKUND AND KUMAON RAILWAY.

At the seventh ordinary general meeting of this company held at the offices, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, Major-General J. S. Trevor presided. He said the dividend now proposed was what he had led them to expect six months ago. The expansion of the passenger and merchandise traffic had been more than counterbalanced by the loss of the artificial traffic which they had had in the first place for the carriage of materials for their line. They must, however, look to the completion of the road to Ranikhet for the further development of their trade, for until the road was finished they were cut off from all access by cart to the cultivated and populous parts of Kumaon. It was thought likely that the road would be finished before the next monsoon. They had had negotiations with the Government for completing the railway, which was to run from Bareilly, via Phillibhit to Lucknow, and if proper terms were offered by the Government the shareholders, would be called together to consider the matter. He expected that their gross receipts for the current half-year would be equal to those of the corresponding period of 1886, although they had lost about 25,000 rupees by the cessation of the carriage of boulders for the Government irrigation department. He was sorry to say that their expenses had increased in a very large ratio; and for the current half-year he did not think they could look forward to a dividend of more than £2 per cent., free of income-tax. He thought, if things went on as at present, and no unforeseen accident occurred, they might safely look forward to their line becoming in eighteen months or two years a safe 5 per cent. dividend paying-line. He concluded by moving the adoption of the report and the declaration of a dividend for the past half-year of £2 7s. per cent.

The motion was unanimously agreed to, and the usual complimentary vote brought the meeting to a close.

THE PROPOSED MILITARY COLLEGE FOR INDIA.

An officer in the 25th Bombay Light Infantry writes of a contemporary on this subject:—

Referring to your leading article of the 11th April regarding the proposed formation of a school for Native officers on the model of the Royal Military College, Sandhurst, I would point out that, although the idea seems a very good one in theory, it is one that is not very easy to put into practice on account of the different castes in the army, the Bombay army especially. Under the present system a man, be he a Brahman or be he a Purwari, rises to be a Native officer through merit, judged by his superior officers after many years of service before them, and for this reason a Brahman sipahi has no objection to be commanded by a low caste officer, as he knows that the Sirkar would not have promoted him if he had not been worthy of the place. Now in the scheme you propose, the men would not care to have a low caste officer suddenly brought into their regiment from a place about which most of the men knew nothing, and regarding whose qualifications they also knew nothing, for it is a well known fact that in India superior qualifications and knowledge, possessed by anyone, no matter what his caste, will go a long way to break up caste prejudice; but if this superiority is not apparent, it will be difficult to keep that discipline up which is so necessary in the army; besides it would be hard lines for good men of low castes not to have a chance of promotion as well as those of higher castes. What I would propose is, that only men of standing in their own country, or the sons of those possessing property near where the regiment is recruited, should be allowed to enter the college, for in these days it is money, not manners, maketh the man, and therefore the low caste man who was a landed proprietor would have as much chance as a high caste man; besides, the low caste man would be known to the men of the regiment as having some status at any rate in their country. We all know that in the European army the officers are gentlemen, if not by birth, at any rate in position, and it is this which keeps up the discipline between the rulers and the ruled, and it is the custom to promote deserving men for service done to commissions, as in the Native army. These deserving men are looked up to by their comrades in the lower ranks as having got their promotion for merit, and as such are accorded the same rights as those who enter the commissioned ranks at once.

I do not think that it is necessary to give the Native officers any more rank than they have at present, but as an inducement for good service they might be made lieutenants and captains; those holding such rank to be always with the battalions in the fighting line, and not to be sent, as you propose, to take their ease with the depot battalion, for we all know how prone the Native officer to say to himself, "I am now a subedar, and shall now take my ease; if all goes well, and I keep as quiet as possible, I shall get my pension in time." After five years in the rank of lieutenant or captain, they would then be relegated to the depot battalion for service to wait their time for pension, and to help in training the recruits required to keep the other two battalions up to strength. In giving these commissions it would have to be a recognised rule that any European officer would be senior to any Native officer, whatever his rank at any time. I do not think that your suggestion of the Irregular battalion is good, as it would have to be filled up with European officers the moment it went on service, who would not know the regiment, and only have a recollection of the Native officers as relics of the past, who had gone through their own regiments and had been relegated to the shelf with the title of lieutenant or captain. The first two battalions ought to go on service when required, and the third be at the depot, the Native officers to be jemadars and subedars in the 3rd battalions, and lieutenants and captains in the 1st and 2nd battalions. There is no doubt that age is one of the things to be got over, but as with the Native, age and experience go together, it will be hard to get on without the other. On looking at the Army List it will be seen that in most regiments the Native officers are men who have been promoted after very short service in the ranks, and this is getting better every day; the Native officers of the present day are not such fossils as they used to be. The great thing wanted is self-reliance, and the way of doing things on their own responsibility, and not to have recourse always to the wing commanders or adjutant. In conclusion, I think that everyone will agree with me that it will want a good deal more than any Indian College can teach to make our Native officers what they ought to be; they are painstaking and not deficient in courage, but are not born to be leaders of men.

THE NIZAM AND SIR SALAR JUNG.

A correspondent, who has recently paid a visit to Hyderabad, says that Colonel Marshall has won golden opinions from all classes. "His appointment," he writes, "appears to have given very general satisfaction. I have never heard anyone so well spoken of by all, Natives and Europeans. He is, at the same time, courteous and kind to all. The position which he holds in the minds of the people is as honourable to the Viceroy's judgment as to this gentleman himself." The presence of such an officer in the counsels of the young Nizam is the surest guarantee we can have that they will be wisely guided. The Viceroy is to be congratulated warmly upon Colonel Marshall's appointment, and if the young Nizam will allow us to advise him, we counsel him earnestly to repose full confidence in Colonel Marshall; to have no secrets from him, and to permit no one to come between himself and his adviser. A great career is before his Highness, and as his own abilities and application are highly spoken of, let him stand fast by his counsellor, who can have no motive to mislead him, and whose advice will ever be directed to the preservation of his own honour, and the welfare of the people whom he rules. It was no doubt an experiment full of risk, to entrust the administration of so important a State entirely to the wisdom of two men so young as the Nizam himself and his Minister. But it was to gratify the Nizam's own earnest wishes that Lord Ripon consented to the arrangement, and it is not very wonderful that disagreements should have arisen. The Nizam has shown true wisdom in the generous treatment he has now shown to his Minister, and it is quite possible that when both men are older, his Highness may be glad to bring Sir Salar Jung back into his confidence. Few men, we believe, doubt that Sir Salar Jung, from his abilities, and from his honest regard for the Nizam's honour, was worthy to be his Minister. And he may yet wish to bring him back. The Government of India has acted wisely in not forcing Sir Salar Jung's services upon the young Nizam. Nothing but mischief could have arisen, as we have seen again and again, from reducing the Nizam himself to a puppet in his own State; and, however much we may regret the retirement of Sir Salar Jung, the Prince has shown great wisdom in the generosity with which he has treated him. By acting as he has done, they part "friends"; and should he ever wish to recall Sir Salar Jung, he can now do so without the slightest shame or embarrassment. Sir Salar Jung will wisely abstain from all interference in the affairs of the State, and from all reflection upon, or criticism of, the administration of his successor. He must withdraw absolutely, and we feel sure that he will do so. Nothing could be more valuable in the present position of parties at Hyderabad than the example of a young nobleman of the first rank withdrawing himself altogether from the miserable sphere of intrigue which it has long presented to the world.

THE ORIGIN OF THE GHILZAIS.

In view of the interest that now centres round the fortunes of the Ghilzais, a correspondent sends a contemporary the following account of the beginnings and growth of the tribe, translated from a Persian MS., written by the Khan of Tezin, with additional information collected from the Chiefs of Lughman, Hissarak, and Sairbi:—

An Afghan named Mukarram Shah quarrelled with his father, the King of Ghor. Leaving his father's court he travelled he knew not whither, and found himself at last at the town of Bushire in Persia. Concealing his parentage he sought out an old man noted for his piety and learning and inquired of him: "What was written in his destiny." The ascetic replied "that such knowledge as he required could only be obtained by serving an apprenticeship as a fakir, and that in due time, by abstinence and prayer and with the help of God, his wishes might be granted to him." Mukarram Shah begged that he might at once begin his apprenticeship and also become the servant of this venerable Shaikh Futhoo. This request was granted, and day by day he waited on and served the old Shaikh, who grew to like him and finally trusted him absolutely. Imagining Mukarram Shah was other than he represented himself to be, he was subjected to repeated questioning by the Shaikh, who eventually succeeded in finding out that he was entertaining the son of the King of Ghor, and wisely caught him to be betrothed to his daughter. Caught in the claws of love Mukarram Shah fell a victim to the charms of the Shaikh's lovely daughter even before the days of the betrothal were completed. When the old Shaikh understood how matters were he became furious, and abusing Mukarram Shah, said: "You have deceived me, oh! son. I do not now believe you are a king's son." He at once sent a kasid to the King of Ghor to find out the truth of Mukarram Shah's story. The King received tidings of his son, called his ministers together, and said: "This day have I received news of my lost son; prepare now robes and horses and gifts, and let them be taken by my most trusted nobles, and let them go and explain everything to the holy man Shaikh Futhoo." The kasid returned to Persia and told the old Shaikh all that had happened, and then obtaining an interview with Mukarram Shah induced him to take his (the kasid's) daughter also as his wife, for Mukarram Shah in the meantime had married the daughter of the Shaikh, and about this time she bore a son, who was named by the old Shaikh "Ghul-zoe," meaning the "son of a thief." Mukarram Shah had now two wives, and remaining in Persia he married two other wives; but from the first two sprang the Ghilzai clans, Ghul-zoe, the son of the first wife; Kakur, the son of the second wife. Ghul-zoe had two sons, the eldest Toran (from Tor black); the second, Burhan (meaning worthy). Toran had two sons, Otakh and Tokhi; Burhan two sons, Euzaf and Eusaf; Euzaf had two sons, Suleiman and Ali; Eusaf three sons, Zohak, Indur, and Turki. The descendants of Euzaf, whose son Suleiman had five sons, are now known as the Maraf, Kheyls, Aboubukar Kheyls of Tezin, and the Jabar Kheyls of Lughman and Hissarak. Some of the children of the sons of Suleiman took their mother's name for their clan; as, for instance, the Khatun Kheyls, who called themselves after their mother the Khatun Bebee, a celebrated woman of her time, having great power in the Khurd Kabul and Shurtargardan Ranges at that period; but they are now one with Aboubukar Kheyls of Tezin. This has always been a strong and influential faction, numbering some 95,000 men and women: they had some 6,000 horsemen and 10,000 armed footmen. Up to the present time they retain their former prestige, and are obliged to supply for service with the ruling Ameer a retinue of horse and foot. This section is better known as the Babukar Kheyls, and are spread over Tezin, Khurd Kabul, Goga Munda, Charasia, Deh Subz, and Khojah Khush Kar, near Ghorabund. Their present chief is Khan Mahomed Khan, who receives an annual income of Rs. 9,000 from the Ameer for the supply of horse and footmen, and as guardians of the road from Jugdulluk to Bhut Khak. The second brother, Niaz Mahomed Khan, was brother in arms with the present Ameer, and accompanied him into exile after Ameer Shere Ali gained the Cabul throne. These two chiefs rule the surrounding country, and have even compelled a semblance of obedience from the famous Jabbar Kheyls, robber chieftains Sadu and Dadu, of Chakri.

The Tezin Valley was well known to our unfortunate fellow-countrymen in 1839, Sirdar Akbar Khan having conducted them thither, and confined them in the Zinnah Fort, after the disastrous retreat through the Khurd Cabul and Jugdulluk defiles. I believe I am the only officer who visited this fort during the campaign, having come to Tezin to meet the Northern Ghilzai Chiefs, just before the battle of Ahmed Kheyl, when there was a rumour of a coalition between the chiefs of the Northern and Southern Ghilzai clans. This fort, located as it is in the heart of the hills, is approached by a deep ravine, rendering its position almost inaccessible, and is surrounded by orchards of apricot and by vineyards. I here met a man whom I at once recognised as a Native of India. On interrogating him he told me he was a kahar in the army of 1839, and being frost-bitten in the retreat was left like many others to die; he had lost his right foot, and some of his fingers, from frost-bite; he had been picked up by the followers of the Tezin chief of that time and cared for by him. At the time I met him he was in the household of Niaz Mahomed Khan, being food-bearer to the zenana. He said he was quite happy, and expressed no desire to return to India.

The Maruf Kheyls, or second section of this clan, inhabit the Hissarak Valley, along the northern slopes of the Sufed Koh Range from the Rud-i-Surkh-ab or (red river) to the western slopes of the Rai Kacha Range, when they mingle with the Babakar Kheyls of Tezin situated on the eastern slopes of the same range. Mazoullah Khan is the representative chieftain of this clan, the son of Ursula Khan, late Wazir of Kabul, and the most influential man in Afghanistan during the palmy days of the reign of the late Ameer, Shere Ali Khan. This clan has many minor sub-sections who wander towards Ghazni and Khelat-i-Ghilzai, feeding their flocks in the summer on the slopes of the Shutargardan Range, and returning to the plains in winter. This clan consists of some 70,000 men, of which about 4,000 are horse and 6,000 foot, all well armed and fairly mounted. The Jabbar Kheyls, who inhabit the Lughman Valley, are a warlike and turbulent clan, and are sub-divided into many minor sections who, for the most part, are nomadic and predatory, passing their summer on the lower slopes of the Phugman ranges and penetrating into Kohistan. They return in the winter to the Lughman Valley, going as far south as Jellalabab, and the entrance of the Kunar Valley. These clans were made great use of by the Emperor Nadir Shah during his occupation of Afghanistan; and there are many instances recorded of both personal and tribal devotion to his cause by them. He conferred on them the name of "Sherpaie," meaning "In the lion's claw"—hence you often hear these men style themselves "Sherpaie Ghilzais." Asmatullah Khan, of Lughman, is the representative chief of this clan, and is a chieftain having great weight in all their many conferences. A great stronghold of the Jabbar Kheyls clan was Chakri, in the Khurd Kabul, and their chiefs Sadu and Dadu (brothers) exacted black-mail on the high road whenever they got the opportunity.

Of the five sons of Suleiman (three of whom we have already spoken of) the two youngest, Kaisur and Shimal, migrated to the Zurmat country, and are known as Zurmati-Suleiman Kheyls; they represent a gathering of some 60,000 men and women, but have no recognised armed retinue; from them spring the Stanizai Ghilzais, who leaving Zurmat returned to Lughman, and eventually settled in and around Jugdulluck, and the eastern end of the Lughman Valley. This tribe, consisting of some 5,000 souls in all, took the name of their father, Astanneh, hence the present corruption Stannazoe, the son of Astanneh and Siannazai. The tribe is one of minor importance, and its members are principally employed as carriers and guardians of the kafilas passing through the Jugdulluk defile, and over Adrak Badrak Pass into Lughman.

A JUBILEE ODE.

[PUNJABI PEASANT'S POINT OF VIEW.]

By the well, where the bullocks go,
Burdened and blind and slow;
By the field, where the young corn dies
In the face of the sultry skies,
They have heard, as the dull Earth hears
The voice of the wind of an hour,
The sound of the Great Queen's voice:—
"My God hath granted me years,
Hath given dominion and power;
And I bid you, O Land, rejoice!"
And the Ploughman settles the share
More deep in the grudging clod;
For he saith:—"The wheat is my care,
And the rest is the will of God.
He sent the Mahratta spear
As He sendeth the rain,
And the Mlech in the fated year
Broke the spear in twain,
And was broken in turn. Who knows
How our Lords make strife?
It is good that the young wheat grows
For the Bread is Life."
Then far and near, as the twilight drew,
Hissed up to the silent dark
Great serpents, blazing, of red and blue,
That rose and faded, and rose anew
That the land might wonder and mark.
"To day is a day of days" they said.
"Make merry, O People all!"
And the Ploughman listened and bowed his head:—
"To day, and to-morrow, God's will," he said,
As he set the lights on the wall.
"He sendeth us years that are good
As He sendeth the dearth.
He giveth to each man his food,
Or Her food to the Earth.
Our Kings and our Queens are afar,—
On their peoples be peace—
God bringeth the rain on the Bar,
That our cattle increase."

And the Ploughman settled the share
More deep in the sun-dried clod:—

"Mogul, Mahratta, and Mlech from the north,
And White Queen over the Seas,
God raiseth them up and driveth them forth.
As the dust from the ploughshare flies in the breeze.
But the wheat and the cattle are all my care
And the rest is the will of God."

A MEDICAL BOARD has invalidated Lieutenant M. S. Eyre, No. 1-1 Eastern Division, Royal Artillery.

PRIVATE PETER FITZGERALD, 1st Battalion Leinster Regiment, Fort William, cut his throat with his razor on May 21, in the most determined manner. He had just come off guard when he was warned for fatigue duty to strike tents on the maidan. This displeased him; he muttered something, went to his kit, took out his looking-glass and placed it on the wall, then his razor, which he stropped as if he was going to shave himself, stood in front of the glass and cut his throat from ear to ear, severing the windpipe, and was dead in a few minutes. The deceased was a teetotaler and a good soldier.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION.

SKETCHES OF SOME DISTINGUISHED ANGLO-INDIANS.

BY

COLONEL W. F. B. LAURIE,

Retired Royal (Madras) Artillery, Author of "Orissa and the Temple of Jagannath," "Narrative of the Second Burmese War," "Our Burmese Wars, and Relations with Burma," "Ashé Pyee," "The Eastern or Fero-most Country," &c.

SKETCHES.

Sir Alexander Burnes—Dr. James Burnes—Sir Henry Lawrence—John Russell Colvin—Brig-General James George Neill—Major-General W. F. Beaton—Colonel William Henry Sykes, M.P.—Major-General W. H. Miller—Major-General Albert Fytche—Sir Arthur Purves Phayre—Sir John William Kaye—Sir Owen Tudor Burnes—The Prinsep—Sir Bartle Frere—Sir Henry Anderson—Sir Henry Rawlinson—Sir Robert Montgomery—Sir Richard Temple—General Sir Donald Stewart—Major-General Sir William Hill—Sir William Andrew—Sir Juland Danvers—and others in the Appendices.

*The foregoing twelve sketches only appeared in the Original Edition.

There is also an Account of Anglo-Indian Periodical Literature, and a brief Sketch of Sporting Literature in India, in which many well-known and distinguished Anglo-Indians are mentioned.

The object of the above work (originally published in 1875) is to give, in a convenient form, sketches of some of the distinguished men who have materially assisted in building up the fabric of our great Indian Empire. The London Press bestowed a considerable amount of praise on the former little volume, the Standard remarking that it should have been twice the size; while the Friend of India said that "every Anglo-Indian should read" what a London journal styled "a deeply interesting volume."

*The sketches have now been more than doubled

LONDON: W. H. ALLEN & CO., 13, WATERLOO PLACE

THE BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENCE.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week, written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies. It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19, 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

Re St. Peter's Church, Jarrow-on-Tyne.
Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,

THE "TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST."

As a medium for English, American, and Australian ADVERTISEMENTS of goods suitable for the tropics, India, as well as Ceylon, the Straits Settlements, Java, and West Indies (Central America being included in that term), or connected with agriculture, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST stands unrivalled, the work being constantly in the hands of Native as well as European and American agriculturists. Being a Monthly Periodical, the TROPICAL AGRICULTURIST lies on the table and is very often referred to during each month, a fact which advertisers will know how to appreciate.

Mr. W. T. Thiselton Dyer, F.L.S., C.M.G., Assistant Director of Kew Gardens, writing of the T. A., refers to it as "an astonishing repository of everything relating to the economic botany of the East."

* * For the sale of plants, seeds, machinery, implements, &c., used in tropical (tea, sugar, fibres, &c.) agriculture, no better advertising medium exists.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 31st May; from Allahabad and Madras to the 29th May; and from Calcutta to the 28th May.

THE QUEEN-EMPRESS's birthday was loyally celebrated throughout India on May 24th.

THE Imperial Legislative Council met at Simla on May 25th, when the Hon. Colonel Wace took his seat as an Additional Member and was placed on the Select Committee on the Punjab Land Bills. A Bill was introduced by the Hon. Mr. Scoble for the reduction of the stamp duty on policies of fire insurance. At the next meeting, on June 1st, the Allahabad University Bill was to be introduced.

THE Birthday Ball took place at the Viceregal Lodge, Simla, on the 26th May.

SIR FREDERICK ROBERTS was to give his annual Eton dinner on the 4th June. It is worth noting, in connection with this commemoration, that, as regards the Indian Civil Service, the Lieutenant-Governors of Bengal, the North-West Provinces, and the Punjab are all Etonians, while the Lieutenant-Governor designate of these Provinces also claims Eton as his school. All four, too, are Halleybury men, so that Haileybury has died hard, as its backers always said it would.

LORD CONNEMARA, the Governor of Madras, will visit Madras on June 20th to unveil the statue of the Queen, and otherwise to join in the second edition of the Jubilee festivities in that city.

A LARGE number of Jubilee addresses from all parts of India have been collected at the headquarters of the Government of India at Simla for transmission to the Secretary of State. They include many vernacular addresses from Native States, and form on the whole a highly representative series.

THE bronze statue of the Queen which has been presented to the city of Madras by Raja Girjapathi Row, of Vizagapatam, and is to be unveiled on the 20th of June, arrived safely at Madras on the P. & O. steamer Nepaul.

THE planters of Kachar have decided to make to the Queen, through the Government of India, a gift of tea as a Jubilee present.

THE subscriptions in India for the Imperial Institute are believed to amount already to not less than two or three lakhs of rupees. Further subscriptions are anticipated, and it is believed that all important subscribers will be enrolled on the Committees, of which a list will be presented to Her Majesty.

A BI-WEEKLY mail service has been established between Upper and Lower Burma, the Flotilla Company having placed extra steamers on the Irrawaddy for the journey between Prome and Mandalay.

THE Governor-General in Council has passed the rules and regulations for the ruby mines district, under which the working of the mines will be leased to the accepted concessionaires.

THE Limbin Prince, with all his followers and the Chiefs of Mone and the other Shan States in the Cis-Salween District, have formally acknowledged British authority.

AN agreement has been made between the Government of India and the Government of Siam for reciprocal free trade on the Burma-Siam frontier.

THE retention of the Agricultural Department, Bengal, which was formed as a temporary measure three years ago, has been recommended to the India Office.

THE Government of the N.W.P. and Oudh have, on the recommendation of the Finance Committee, agreed to a substantial reduction being made in the allowance granted for the annual migration to Naini Tal.

LIEUTENANT TINLEY, 1st Bombay Lancers, and Lieutenant Pain, Mounted Infantry, have surprised and killed Moung Toke, Kyaw Bo, Chan Aye, Nga Hlaing, and thirty more dacoits near Thayetmyo, twelve miles south-west of Meektila. This completely clears out the dacoit leaders in that district.

THE last news from Kabul says the Amir's health is improved, and that he has moved to a country house in the Chardeh valley, fourteen miles out of Kabul. His Highness has not held any durbars for some days, though he has let it be made known that he himself will take the field against the Ghilzais if his generals do not quell the rebellion soon.

INTELLIGENCE has been received from Kandahar that Gholam Hyder Orakzai has joined hands with Sikandar Khan in the Maruf district. This is satisfactory news, but it is equally so to learn that latest accounts from Herat show that place to be quiet: no signs of rebellion against the Amir's authority are visible. The rumours from Kandahar that the Herat garrison had mutinied are evidently unfounded, though precautions were wisely taken by the Amir's officers on the news of the revolt in the Hotak country. These consisted in arranging that no excessive number of Ghilzais should remain in any one regiment, and, with this object in view, certain transfers of soldiers were made among the various battalions.

THE Bombay Government have issued a Resolution refusing to cancel the appointment of Mr. Crawley-Boevey to be Acting Chief Presidency Magistrate during the absence of Mr. Cooper, and declining to forward the memorial against the appointment to the Secretary of State for final disposal.

MR. GIBSON, Conservator of Forests, has been mauled by a tiger at Khandeish, and is now lying in the European General Hospital at Bombay.

THE death is announced of General Shamshere, Commander-in-Chief of the Nepaul Army. General Deo Shamshere is mentioned as his probable successor.

SIR GANPAT RAO, Minister of Gwalior, on behalf of the Durbar, has presented a lakh and twenty thousand rupees to the Imperial Institute.

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR OF BENGAL has arrived at Darjeeling.

MR. JOHN CAPPER, connected with the Times of Ceylon for many years, has undertaken the editorship of a journal connected with Indian and English trade. This journal is published in London in the Hindustani language, for circulation in the up-country bazaars in the Indian Mofussil. The object in publishing this journal, is to bring the dealers throughout the Upper Provinces in India in close connection with manufacturing producers in England, and to make known to the former that a large number of manufactured articles are produced in the country, of which they have very little knowledge, and certainly very little information as to their prices.

KAVANAGH, V.C.—A mural tablet to the memory of the late Mr. Kavanagh, V.C., has recently been put in the Civil Lines Church, Lucknow. The inscription on it is as follows:—In honour of one whose name will never be forgotten, Thomas Henry Kavanagh, V.C., who, on the night of 9th November, 1857, with the devotion of an ancient Roman hero, taking his life in his hand, went forth from a beleaguered Residency, and passing through a city thronged with merciless enemies, successfully guided Sir Colin Campbell and his Army to the relief of the garrison."

Notes of the Week.

REUTER'S agents in India and the Calcutta correspondent of the Times have curious ideas regarding the sort of information from India which the British public requires. It hardly seems worth the trouble, and certainly not worth the expense, to telegraph first that orders have been issued for the passage of British troops to the Afghan frontier, for the completion of the line to Candahar as well as the extension of the railway from Peshawur to Jumrood, and then to wire that there is not a word of truth in the above rumours, and that they have been officially contradicted at Simla.

THE fact, which we have often pointed out, remains that no reliable unofficial news gets to the Indian Press from beyond our own frontiers. The greater part of the Afghanistan intelligence is manufactured in the Peshawur bazaar, and when the article reaches Calcutta and is put into type there the Times correspondent—an English barrister—amplifies it according to the “gup” which he hears in the Bar library or at the Bengal Club. It would be amusing, although also a waste of time, to place in parallel columns the various “shaves” which have been telegraphed during the past two months as news from Afghanistan, and the facts as officially ascertained.

It is likely enough that there has been a mutiny of the Afghan troops at Herat, but according to the latest reports the mutineers consisted of only half a Ghilzai regiment. Mutiny is chronic amongst the Afghan soldiery, but the Ameer appears to deal very summarily with offenders. Nearly all the rebels, says the telegram, were killed or captured. It may be taken for granted that all that were captured were killed, for his Highness is not given much to mercy.

MR. BRANDON THOMAS has written a song for the Artists' Corps, in which he makes a Volunteer boast that “his bayonet bent and his musket jammed, just like a regular soldier's,” which may be a thing to laugh at in England, but is a very serious matter to think of in India. Yet by the mail to hand it is reported that on the Queen's birthday parade at Calcutta the 1st Battalion Leicester Regiment could not deliver the third round of fire, owing to the jamming of the exploded cases in their rifles. The rifles were a new issue, and this was the first occasion on which they were used.

IN the account given it is said that “the refilled cartridges are reported to be in fault,” but we imagine that the fault lies also elsewhere. It is not a pleasant reflection to indulge in that “jamming” is common in India—with the soldiers' rifles, as it was said to be in the Soudan.

WHERE does Truth get his Indian information from? The following culled from that journal is strange, but not true:—“I hear that the Duke of Connaught has applied for further leave of absence, but this has been refused by Sir Donald Stewart.”

AGE ought, of course, to be honoured, but when one gets to be 400 years of age it is time surely to have done with vanity. This does not appear, however, to be the view taken by Bramhanund Sarasvarty Swamy Saunkrachaija Juggutgurn, who is believed by a large number of the inhabitants of India to be of that age, and who is now on a visit to Calcutta. He met, we are told, with a reception quite unique in its character:—

“The whole assembly rose up, and then knelt or bowed down at his feet, the dust whereof was soon cleared off, as no one present would allow the opportunity to slip, to obtain a few grains of the dust to put on his own head. A rattan stool, covered with a small square carpet, a pair of new wooden shoes, a nice snow-white towel, and two large brass water-pots, filled with pipe-water and unfiltered river water, respectively, had been kept in readiness in the verandah. Bramhanund Sarasvarty took his seat on the rattan stool. Then commenced the work of washing the feet and legs, which took about fifteen minutes to go through, and was performed by the pious host. The pipe-water was finished. And when the feet were being washed with the holy water of the Ganges, then came the rush for a handful of the same water, running down the legs, which was drunk by each individual present with an apparent feeling of deep reverence, some considering, perhaps, that their salvation was thereby secured.

Notwithstanding the “high class classical” education, of which the Bengali Babú is the result, it would appear that if knowledge comes, wisdom still lingers a little in the capital of India.

THE Allahabad paper says:—“The military honours' list for the second phase of the operations in Burma will probably go home by next week's mail. There are, we understand, likely to be recommendations for brevet majorities. As one was not given for the original expedition, it was believed that the Distinguished Service Order was likely to supplant such brevets; but such would seem not to be the case. It may reasonably be supposed that the Commander-in-Chief, who directed the operations which have had such marked results in securing the pacification of Upper Burma, will not be forgotten in the Jubilee Gazette. There were some 30,000 men in all engaged in the work of pacification, and if success is to count for anything, some notable reward has well been earned by the distinguished officer who commanded them. There was no ‘crowning mercy,’ such as Tel-el-Kebir, it is true, but neither was there a fiasco such as the Nile Expedition.”

THE Indian trade and navigation reports for April, compared with those of April of last year, show a net increase in the value of imports of 19,12,778 rupees, and an increase in every item of import except yarns and textile fabrics, which decreased by over 13 lakhs. The net increase in exports was 32,70,649 rupees, and every item showed an increase except chemicals, drugs, medicines, narcotics, and dyeing and tanning materials, which decreased by upwards of 17 lakhs.

THE University of Oxford has conferred the degree of M.A. (honoris causâ) upon Mr. H. G. Keene, C.I.E. Mr. Keene was a Commoner of Wadham College, but on receiving an appointment to the Indian Civil Service he was obliged to leave Oxford without taking a degree. He has since his retirement from India been residing within the precincts of his old college, and the governing body have now gracefully condoned his omission of past days by granting him to-day the honourable degree of Master of Arts, Oxon.

As Colorado has now become the richest mineral country in the United States, it is not to be wondered at that the gold and silver mines in which it abounds should be at present attracting the notice of capitalists in England. The group of mines situated in Mount Sneffles, Ouray County, consisting of one rich gold-bearing property and two silver-bearing lodes, are being offered to the public, as will be seen from the prospectus published in another column, under very favourable terms. A company called “The Governor Group” has been formed under the Limited Liability Act, to raise the necessary working capital to develop these properties, which have been acquired from the Whitehead Mining and Smelting Company, who have offered to take the whole of their purchase money in shares. The capital of the new company has been fixed at £100,000, in £1 shares, of which £66,667 are offered for public subscription, but it is not intended to call up more than 10s. per share at present, as the directors will be guided by the advice of the Consulting Engineers, Messrs. Bainbridge, Seymour, and Rathbone, in developing the mines and regulating the expenditure of working capital. This seems to be a very satisfactory arrangement, and under the practical control of such engineers the company offers a promising investment to intending shareholders.

It is feared that the disaffection at present prevailing in certain parts of the Ameer's dominions may extend to the Khwaja Amran, where there are several engineers out just at present with survey parties in connection with the railway extension, and border ruffianism might be attracted by the prospect of looting their camps. In view of any such possibility a company of native infantry has been sent to Killa Abdulla and another to Gulistan—each of which is a railway terminus at present. The native cavalry in Peshin Fort will also be raised by a troop, and the post at Kach on the Peshin side of the Chappar Rift raised to fifty sepoy

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

AFGHANISTAN AND PERSIA.

(Madras Mail.)

The Afghan question is as hard to handle as a hedgehog, and it is so far less touchable that it has no soft or unguarded point to get a good hold of. Our London contemporaries for the most part stand aside and pretend not to see it. If, perchance, compelled to say something in explanation of a startling telegram just received, they approach the subject with quite unusual diffidence, and are careful not to commit themselves to the expression of any very decided opinions. The Spectator alone feels qualified to speak with a certain air of authority, and it must be admitted that no journal of the present day treats Oriental topics with greater knowledge, sagacity, and freedom from partiality. So far as this country and its neighbours are concerned, Mr. Meredith Townsend still fancies himself at Serampore, and writes with the same force and incisiveness which marked his conduct of the Friend of India. Occasionally he gives a loose rein to his imagination, but more frequently than otherwise circumstances justify his audacity, and show that "old experience doth attain to something of a prophetic strain." He now lifts up a warning voice and bids the Government beware of pushing Russia into needless activity assuredly prejudicial to British interests. It is not Herat that is so much in danger as Persia. In less than a month the faint image of independence that still meets the eye would be entirely effaced, and the land occupied in force by military colonies. Beluchistan would then lie at the mercy of the Czar, and Great Britain would be compelled largely to increase her European garrison in India, and to station permanently a powerful squadron in the Persian Gulf. "There is absolutely no reason," the Spectator asserts, "why he (the Czar) should waste his treasures and his people on so sterile a conquest as Afghanistan; and if we are foolish enough to pursue the same policy we may find ourselves checkmated by a mere order from St. Petersburg. The British Government would look wise indeed if, just as it had quarrelled with the Afghans by the occupation of Candahar, it heard that a Russian army was advancing, not to Herat, but to dictate a treaty of submission at the gates of Teheran." There is, happily, no indication of any sort of intention or desire on the part of either the British nation or the Government to appropriate a square inch of Afghan territory, or to loosen a stone from the walls of any Afghan fortress. A majority of the masterful men who at one time advocated the retention of Candahar at any price, and the adoption of the Helmund as the extreme frontier of British India, have either passed away from the scene of political discussion, or have greatly modified their views as to the expediency of wandering away into space in order to meet the Russians, halfway. That policy is now recognized as chivalrous and heroic, but also directly opposed to the simplest principles of strategy. An Alexander the Great would dispense altogether with a base of operations, and would think nothing of ammunition and commissariat supplies. But then the "Macedonian madman"—was simply a conqueror whose ambition led him ever onward, without any fixed idea of permanent possession, or even as to the possibility of retreat. Luckily for ourselves we have no "great Aæthæan conqueror" on the throne, or even at the Horse Guards or War Office. We have come to recognize the extreme danger of leaving our military resources and reinforcements 500 miles in the rear of the operating army, with the communications and line of march infested by an unfriendly, if not absolutely hostile, people inferior to none in the art of pillage, molestation, and guerilla warfare.

Should the Russians advance to Teheran it will not be in consequence of the provocation afforded by the British seizure of Candahar, or of defiant demonstrations as regards Herat. It is admitted, without gainsay, that the Russians, whenever they choose to trample underfoot international courtesies and engagements, are in a position to take and garrison Herat without the slightest apprehension of being opposed or disquieted in that quarter. No movement they could make would be more pleasantly commented upon in Berlin and Vienna, but solely under the mistaken impression that active hostilities, confined to Central Asia, would immediately break out between the Governments of St. Petersburg and St. James's, and release the strain now felt in South-Eastern Europe. Nothing, however, can be more certain than that England would leave to the Indian Government the duty of protecting the Punjab frontier, while the Baltic and the Black sea were swept of Russian ships and commerce, and the dangers of internal revolution were added to the difficulties of warfare with a maritime Power of superior force. The occupation of Persia is, we suspect, far more imminent and certainly more practicable than the seizure of Afghan territory. No treaty obligations exist to justify the interposition of Great Britain. Self-defence, indeed, may render it necessary to guard, perhaps to annex, the shores and islands of the Persian Gulf, but it is not apparent that anything beyond that can now be done to arrest the Russian advance.

In the beginning of the present century the importance of maintaining the independence of Persia was strongly appreciated by the Marquis of Wellesley. The strength and resources of that kingdom may have been over-estimated, and it was not from Russia that any danger was then anticipated, though the co-operation of an auxiliary Cossack force may have entered into Napoleon's calculations. In those days the natural enemy of British India was France. Tippoo Sahib and the French Republic had alike disappeared, but it was feared that the Afghans, supported by the French, might overrun Oudh and shake British ascendancy, even in Bengal. The danger of aggression suddenly disappeared, but only to be replaced by a worse and more compromising evil. Persia was removed from the surveillance of the Governor-General in Council, and thrown into the lumber-room of the Foreign Office in Downing-street. Then began the neglect of the ancient kingdom of Persia. English officers were withdrawn from the Shah's service. The Russians quietly stepped into the vacant place, and proclaimed themselves the special friends and protectors of the Shah. Twice through Russian intrigues and misrepresentations have Persian troops attacked the Afghan fortress of Herat, and should the enterprise now be renewed it is pretty certain to be unsuccessful. In brief, we cannot guarantee Herat to the Afghans any more than Teheran to the Persians, but it is still in our power to safeguard our interests in the south and to close the Persian Gulf against Russian ships, and to prevent the approach of the Russian land forces to the coveted waters of the Indian Ocean. It is with the future of Persia far more than with that of Afghanistan that we are directly concerned. The Afghans are like a cactus hedge, impervious alike to friend or foe. The soundest policy is to leave them to their own devices, contenting ourselves with strengthening the personal position of Abdur Rahman, who thus far seems to have acquitted himself as a faithful and loyal ally. To withdraw from him the subsidies he so sorely needs would be to compel him to fling himself into the arms of the Russians, with the inevitable result of throwing the whole country into confusion. If any change be deemed expedient it should take the form rather of increasing than of diminishing the aid now afforded to the Ameer.

INDIA'S VITALITY.

(Pioneer.)

"L'Europe c'est une taupinée," exclaimed Napoleon one day tired of marching and re-marching his armies from the Nieman to the Guadalquivir, full of disdain at battles which engaged only a hundred thousand men or so, and disgusted that eighteen centuries of civilization had not left the society of the Western world for him to work on at his pleasure: "Europe is a mole hill. If you wish to work on a great scale you must go to the East." There is perhaps no great resemblance between the little Corsican and the Sanitary Commissioner to the Government of India; but there is something which recalls the Napoleonic epigram in the latter's annual report. Your Register-General at home has to deal with a population of only thirty millions, whereas the Commissioner in India surveys the vital phenomena of a mighty mass of two hundred millions: in the one case we see thousands appear, to use a favourite expression of American journalism, in the cradle or disappear in the tomb, in the other we count by millions. The Registrar has experience for the most part of commonplace diseases, sore-throats, and rheumatism, and colic, and the like; his report becomes agitated if scarlet fever swoops down on Puddleton-by-the-Sea and carries off some two or three hundred of its sleepy inhabitants, and he would altogether lose his head if he had to watch and mark the colossal ravages of dolorous monsters like the Indian small-pox, cholera or protean fevers, each of which claims its victims by hundreds of thousands. The greater area of the Indian Commissioner's operations has, of course, its disadvantages. The details of his sketch are less full, and when complete, less reliable than those of his English confrères. In some places there is a simple blank. Nevertheless, the broad outlines are there plain enough, and furnish plenty of food for reflection if we look at them steadily.

For example, should anyone be of a philosophical and musing habit of mind, given to propounding monosyllabic conundrums "Whence?" "Why?" "Whither?" and with a secret preference for Kant's "Practical Reason" to the latest romance of Robert Louis Stevenson, he will find this black-and-white of the Sanitary Commissioner eminently suggestive. No matter, indeed, what our temperament may be, there is something impressive in the fact that if every man, woman and child in London were to die tomorrow, its dead would not equal those slain annually by disease within the British Indian territories: that the year's births could place a dusky babe in the room of every dead, and leave some millions to spare; and that of these new arrivals one-half will be dead before five years are over, having been transmigrated into the form of Hindu mortality for no apparent reason but to devour, squalling and in equalor, a few seeds of half-grudged gram. Here are some five millions concrete exemplifications of the "Whither," some seven or more millions of the "Whence," and the very big "Why" represented by the two or three millions of the newly-born, who before five years have gone will have been driven off by the broad-nostrilled, black and spotted dogs of Yama. But if moral and teleological questions are apt to rise at the contemplation of this vast army which annually passes across the stage of Indian humanity, there are others of more importance to the practical administrator. Only in one Province in India in 1885 did the death-rate exceed the birth-rate, so that the net addition to the population must be counted in millions. The Sanitary Commissioner rejoices at this. For example, in reference to Bombay he says the steady increase in the birth-ratios since 1875, except during the famine years, is "very satisfactory." The Sanitary Commissioner may perhaps be excused for a certain professional pride in a swelling birth-rate, just as a midwife would rather assist in introducing a big than a little candidate for the world's suffrages; but the economist and the administrator, with perpetual cries of poverty and distress ringing in their ears, may be pardoned if they regard the matter from a different point of view. "Talk of the invasion of Huns and Goths, the deeds of Attila and Alaric," exclaims the author of Coningsby, "they are nothing to the population returns," and certainly these returns in India raise grave problems for the future. Take the case of these Provinces and Oudh. The population there is already far denser than that of any country in Europe, and in 1885 there was an addition—the excess of births over deaths—amounting to more than 400,000. It is absurd to pretend joy at this. The land had more on it already than it could feed. The fact that so large a percentage of the total mortality throughout India is of children under five years of age is itself a strong indication that the additions to the population are insupportable. It is at least certain that no improvement in the standard of comfort of the population can be expected from advances in agricultural skill so long as the increased produce is swallowed up in providing for new-comers. Little help can be expected from emigration; a great deal might be expected from migration—the Feudatory States are only one-third as densely populated as the British territories—provided those who are loudest in complaint at the people's poverty would not encourage them in a foolish prejudice against leaving the spot where they were born; but the effect of all these measures could at the best be only palliative. The habit of marrying and begetting an indefinite number of children with no "visible means of support" might be suited to the time when war and famine and pestilence periodically thinned the population, but it is thoroughly inconvenient now.

THE BOMBAY MILITARY SECRETARY.

(Times of India.)

The post of Military Secretary to the Government of Bombay will be vacant next month when Colonel Willoughby retires, and many rumours as to his probable successor are now rife in military circles. It is suggested pretty freely that the office will fall to General Pottinger, R.A., a favoured and favourite and popular officer. Two objections have, however, been raised, neither of which are perhaps likely to be overwhelming in themselves. General Pottinger, as an officer of the Royal Artillery, is not specially debarred from an office essentially meant for the officer of the Bombay Army. In the second place he will within a short time receive promotion ranking him with major-generals, and it is, to say the least of it, unusual for a major-general to occupy an office comparatively unimportant. H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught is a major-general. The brigadiers in command of the Bombay divisions have, as a regular matter of routine, to retire when they are promoted to the rank of major-general, and it would seem an anomaly if a major-general should nevertheless hold the military secretaryship. However, anomalies do exist in the service, and there are few regulations through which the authorities cannot, if they choose to do it, drive a coach and four. General Pottinger is a good and gallant officer, and so are the other officers in the running with him. The English army, however, are already admirably represented in this Presidency by General Gillespie, and it should be remembered, we think, that the Bombay army have also many good men, who have fair claims to consideration, and to such scanty prizes as the service affords.

MORE ABOUT THE GHILZAIS.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The Ghilzai nation, which is now in revolt against the Amir, is inferior to the Duranis alone in number and political importance, among the various peoples which inhabit Afghanistan. It is divided into five great clans, the Suleiman Kels, the Andaris, the Tarakis, the Tokhis, and the Hotaks, or Ohtaks. The Kharotis, Nasiris, and Lohanis, commonly grouped together in India as Povindahs, are not Ghilzais. The Duranis deny the right of the Ghilzais to call themselves true Afghans, looking on them, at the best, as half-breed, an ancestry symbolised in the fable of their being descended from a Persian Prince who had an intrigue with a Durani girl, whence the name Ghilzai or base-born. The real derivation of the tribal appellation, is, however, it is believed, to be found in the word Khilji, a Turkish clan, mentioned by Oriental historians. It is certain that Ghazni and the neighbouring country was the seat of a Turkish monarchy in the eleventh century, and it may be inferred that the Ghilzais are descended from the Turkish immigrants. All trace of the Turki tongue has disappeared, but in features, character and the shape of his head, which is much rounder than that of the Afghan proper, though less so than that of the pure Mongol Hazara, the Ghilzai much resembles the Turk of Asia Minor. The Ghilzais occupy a wide belt of country extending from the Kabul river on the north, to the latitude of Kelat-i-Ghilzai on the south, and are thus separated from British territory only by the border tribes. Their numbers are variously estimated, but they probably count not less than eighty thousand fighting men, of whom the Suleiman Kels furnish about half, the Farakis, Andaris, and Tokhis about twelve thousand each, and the Hotaks about half that number. There are, however, some fifteen or twenty thousand Ghilzais in the Amir's army, which considerably diminishes their fighting strength. The Suleiman Kels inhabit the country north and east of Ghazni; next to them come the Andaris; then the Tarakis; and then the Tokhis, distributed along the valley from Ghazni to Kelat-i-Ghilzai, to the east of which, extending up to the Kakar and Povindah country, are the Hotaks. The last-named, though the smallest in point of numbers, have always been the most independent of the five clans; probably owing to the inaccessibility of their country; and until the reign of the present Amir they paid no taxes. Indeed, Ghilzais of all the clans were very lightly taxed. Those in the fertile valleys bordering the great high road from Kandahar to Kabul paid a small fixed assessment on their land, but the nomads or semi-nomads, who constitute a large majority of the clans, paid only on the cattle they took down to the warmer pastures about Kandahar in winter months. Ever since the Barakzais established themselves as masters in Kabul, the Ghilzais have been the mainstay of their strength. They could always be trusted to keep down their hereditary enemies, the Kandahar Duranis, and from the death of Dost Muhammad, until recently, the majority of officers of rank as well as a large proportion of the regular troops, have been Ghilzais. The Ghilzais again have always been the most inveterate foes of the Feringi, and situated along the eastern border of the Amir's kingdom, have been looked on as a bulwark to invasion. It was the Ghilzais who destroyed Elphinstone's retreating army in 1842, and gave us tough work at the Shuturgardan and half-a-dozen other places in the last war; beside shaking and driving back Sir Donald Stewart's line at Ahmed Khel. They had no particular love for Amir Abdur Rahman; but accepted him gladly enough, until last year, when his insatiable greed led him to confiscate the small hereditary pensions of the priests attached to various shrines all over the country, the majority of whom are Ghilzais, and to decree a number of new taxes, in addition to increasing the old ones. The pronouncement of the Andaris, in October last, was the result. A Durani regiment had been raised in Kandahar, obviously to counterbalance Ghilzai influence, and was marching to Kabul to receive its arms.

On the road it was surrounded by a gathering of the Andari tribe, its treasure, tents, and uniform taken from it, and the men allowed to go free. A force was at once sent from Kabul to punish the rebels, but the general in command, finding them too strongly posted, swore on the Koran that he had been sent, not to chastise them, but to redress their grievances, and afterwards treacherously cut off and slew a small party, who had unsuspectingly approached his camp. So disgusted were the Afghan soldiers with him, that they refused to cut off the heads of the slain, and he had to get the bloody business done by his Usbeg Cavalry. Had not the season been so late, all the Ghilzai clans would no doubt have risen in rebellion at once; but the snow was at hand, and they could not expose their wives and children to an Afghan winter by abandoning their homes and taking them to the hills. A golden opportunity was thus afforded to the Amir to repair the consequence of his folly. The remission of some of the obnoxious dues, and a little flattery and conciliation, such as his grandfather, Dost Mahomed, so well knew how to use, would have healed over the sore, and brought back the tribes to their allegiance. But the Amir is the most obstinate and vindictive, as well as the most avaricious of mankind. Every Ghilzai house that his myrmidons could reach was fined five rupees. Every family was ordered to send in a matchlock and a tulwar, while the obnoxious taxes were collected with ruthless severity. The consequence is that the Ghilzai country is up from one end to the other, and that the only troops the Amir is not afraid to send against them have, up to the present, done nothing to suppress the rebellion. His General, Gulam Haidar Khan, seems to have been driven back to Ghazni by the Tarakis and Hazaras, while the Sikandar Khan is still facing the Hotak gathering at Ataghar. It is quite possible that the Amir may be able to put down the revolt, but he will never regain the prestige he has lost, and it will be difficult for the most ardent partizan of Lord Ripon's scuttling policy to vaunt him again as the popular ruler of a strong and friendly Afghanistan.

AFGHANISTAN.—I.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Whether the result of the present Ghilzai revolt be a success or failure for the Amir, it is certain that we must prepare for the inevitable collapse at no distant date of the fabric which we have built up. The Amir is old, and there is no one of note to succeed him. Even if he should succeed in maintaining his authority unimpaired till the last, his death must again bring us face to face with the problem of 1865. The right of the successor whom he may nominate will be challenged, as that of Dost Mahomed's successor was in that year; and the more certainly and successfully challenged, because that successor cannot be a man of the calibre of Sher Ali Khan, and his rivals will be much better supported than were Mahomed Afzal Khan and his brother Mahomed Azim who contended with Sher Ali. In fact, the problem will be of a difficulty vastly intensified compared with that which Lord Lawrence declined to face. In 1865 a mere declaration of support by the Viceroy of India would have established Sher Ali Khan firmly on the throne, and it is the root of all our subsequent troubles that Lord Lawrence declined, or was not allowed to make this declaration. Had he done so, there would probably have been no Afghan problem and no Afghan war. Mahomed Yakoub would in due course have succeeded Amir Sher Ali, who might indeed have been alive and strong on his throne at this day; and under the long uninterrupted rule of a strong man, Afghanistan would, ere this, have settled down; or rather the peace and order existing in Dost Mahomed's later days would have continued, to the complete extinction of all those elements of strife and turbulence which have been excited to such vigorous life by the long struggle of 1864-69, and again by our campaigns of 1879-80.

Even if, after 1869, the Duke of Argyll had not undone Lord Mayo's work, the above favourable state of affairs might now exist; but from the time that the Liberal Government drove Amir Sher Ali Khan into the arms of Russia, it became evident that the idea of an United Afghanistan, as a buffer against that aggressive Power, must sooner or later be abandoned. It is just possible that, had Lord Lytton been patient, and been willing to distinguish himself rather by skilful diplomacy than by coups de théâtre, the Amir Sher Ali might have been won back to confidence, and we should have been saved from undoing our own work in Afghanistan at a cost of twenty millions sterling. This is probable, but it is by no means certain. This much is, however, certain that, when the Afghan campaigns had thus undone our work, it was useless to attempt to patch it up again. We should have then accepted what we must now accept; the fact that the idea of an United Afghanistan had to be abandoned, and that the only course to adopt was to establish a protectorate of the small States, originally independent, which Amir Dost Mahomed Khan only succeeded shortly before his death in welding together into a single kingdom; and which have no cohesion, save in the firm grasp of a strong ruler.

In 1878, before the first Cabul campaign, a polemical writer of the day supposed the case of our army in possession of Cabul, every strategical point in Afghanistan in our grasp, Russia check-mated, our prestige in Asia higher than at any previous period of our history. "Then," he wrote, "will arise the question, what is to be done with the country we have occupied?" The answer he gave was "that united Afghanistan which Lord Mayo desired to build up as our bulwark in the west must fall, as have fallen other great schemes of great men, and its fragments must be reconstituted as circumstances permit. In 1809 our frontier was on the Jumna, as now on the Indus, with a powerful kingdom separated therefrom by the breadth of sundry weak States which it is desired to absorb. We assumed the protectorate of those States, and threw forward our garrisons to the banks of the Sutlej to cover them. Beyond thus protecting ourselves and them, we exercised no interference in the administration of those States, and incurred no cost on their account. These arrangements resulted in thirty-five years of security, and the expense was no greater than that of the armed preparedness in any case, necessitated by the proximity of a formidable neighbour. Had the territory of Sirhind, intervening between the Jumna and the Sutlej, been an United Kingdom—had the States of Patiala, Jhind, Nabha, Kapurthala, Faridkot, &c., been under one ruler—the buffer policy would have been practicable. Lord Minto might then have done for that kingdom, in 1809, as Lord Mayo desired to do with Afghanistan in 1869. He might have strengthened and supported it, and made it our bulwark in the west, and much of the cost of the armed preparedness would have been saved us. Up to 1873 Lord Mayo's plan was still practicable. If Sher Ali now sees his mistake, or if some chief arises at Cabul capable of taking his place, that scheme may be practicable again. If not we must fall back on the plan which Lord Minto adopted, and the protected States of Khorassan, covered by a British garrison, must interpose between an aggressive neighbour and ourselves."

What was true in 1878 is true still, and on the overthrow or death of the present Amir, the plan then proposed will be again before us. It will then be no longer possible to maintain that united Afghanistan, which it has hitherto been our aim to consolidate and support, for financial reasons, if no other, forbid the attempt to support a ruler incapable of maintaining himself. The Afghan kingdom was created by Dost Mahomed Khan, grandfather of the present Amir, out of the fragments of the Durani Empire. He possessed, originally, Cabul and Ghuzni, and added thereto the province of Candahar (in 1855); the Herat districts of Subzawar Farah and Lash Jowain (in 1857; Maimena and other Uzbek States north of Hazaristan (in 1858); Kundiaz and Badakshan, north of the Hindu Kush (in 1860); and finally the remainder of the province of Herat (in 1863). The tribes of Hazaristan, the mountain tract enclosed by the above states and provinces, were never practically reduced to subjection, though for some years they rendered a sort of allegiance to the Amir Sher Ali, which was shaken off during our Cabul campaigns. At the death of the present Amir, these acquisitions of his grandfather must again fall apart. Cabul (with Ghuzni and Jellalabad), Candahar, Herat, and the States north of Hazaristan and the Hindu Kush, must for a time, at any rate, fall apart of each other. Most of them, if we play our cards wisely, should come under a British protectorate, and the buffer policy be re-established under another form.

What are our objects? Are they not—(1) To secure the main routes between Hindustan, Persia and Turkestan; (2) to render impossible that Afghanistan should be utilised by an enemy, either as a base of actual operations, or as a menace and instrument of disturbance against the peace of Hindustan; (3) to establish a frontier which we can undertake to protect, and to have the means of watching and guarding it?

Now, in these views, we have no immediate occasion with Eastern Afghanistan. We are near enough to watch it, and to occupy the strategical points before an enemy could reach them; and this fact is sufficient to ensure the disregard by an enemy of a line of operations so exceedingly unfavourable. The Chief of Eastern Afghanistan, comprising Cabul, Ghazni and Jellalabad, need give us little more concern than the ruler of Nepal, and our relations with that province might be similar to those with Nepal. The case of Western Afghanistan is very different. While the only practicable routes to and through the eastern province present great physical difficulties, only to be surmounted at the cost of much time, labour and money, all the great military routes between India and the North and West meet at Candahar, and are there compressed into a narrow space between the desert on the south, and the mountains of Hazaristan on the north. Candahar is thus the most important strategical point south of the Oxus, and Herat and Farah are of great, though less importance. If these provinces were all secure, Eastern Afghanistan could be disregarded.

THE COMMISSIONER.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

He had the reputation of being a very amusing man, among men, after dinner, when the ladies had left, by which I understood that he had a fund of questionable anecdote. The first time I dined with him I quite expected to be very much shocked, but, at the same time, to be doubled up with inextinguishable laughter. However, that evening, he was clearly not in the vein to be amusing, nor has he been anything but respectably prosaic on every other occasion when it has been my privilege to meet him. I myself look upon him as a fraud, but I know lots of men—amusing and clever men—who repeat with infinite relish one or two modest witticisms which they say are the Commissioner's property, and at the mere recollection of which they laugh consumedly. It might be expected that those who appreciate his peculiar humour would be his juniors, young men who from motives of self-advancement would take an interest in a Commissioner, and pat him on the back; for in spite of the ruinous exchange, a Commissioner is still a fairly great man. But, on the contrary, his admirers are chiefly his contemporaries. I gather from this either that the present generation is too preoccupied to be appreciative, or that, in the Commissioner's boyhood—he wasn't a Commissioner then—he drew too largely upon a rich vein of humour which collapsed under the strain, and has never been heard of since. Thus men of his own age remember him for what he was, and forget that his fancy is not by any means so playful as in the old Haileybury days. I once heard him described as "a good old jossar"! Needless to say it was not one of his own service who thus spoke of him; for Indian civilians have far too deeply-rooted a respect for themselves and for one another thus to describe a burra sahib.

No, the irreverent speaker was of course a subaltern—one of that dangerous class of young men who respect nobody. When I had in some measure recovered from the shock of hearing a Commissioner mentioned in this affectionate-y complimentary way, I felt it did in a manner seem to fit the great man. I do not know the exact meaning of "jossar," but it sounds comfortable, and round, and easy-going, and in these particulars the name seems faithfully descriptive. He is certainly good—I don't mean religious, though he does go to church every Sunday and sits in the pew immediately under the pulpit—but good-hearted, good-natured, unselfish, and a good old fellow. Then old. Well, he is not so young as he was, and is not likely to get any younger; but at the same time he is very active and energetic, and plays rackets every afternoon, though he objects to being cut over at that delightful game even more strongly than do younger men. He is a most hospitable man, and inhabits a large house where dinners and other festivities connected with eating and drinking are always going on. He has a foolish old-world notion, that his large pay is given him by a discerning Government, more that he may keep up a position in this country, than that he should put it by against his old age in England. Consequently he has not saved in the course of some thirty years' service more than a very few thousands of rupees. Even the one year when his wife took the children home, he kept on his large house and gave away as much food and drink as ever to his many friends; utterly scouting the suggestion of old Justice, the Magistrate, that he should give up his house, and that they should chum together. Nor would he consent to go and live at the Club, where he might have had an excellent bedroom all to himself, and have lived well—though inhospitably—at about three hundred and fifty a month or perhaps less. So he stayed on in the big house, gave his dinners the same as ever, and filled his rooms with guests, his compound with tents, and his table with dinners of both sexes every day during the race week, as he had been accustomed to for years past. He possessed two graceless nephews, sons of a widowed sister, and these young gentlemen found that soldiering in India was not such bad fun when their limited means were eked out by frequent and handsome tips; for this uncle had not been overtaken by that extraordinary aberration which is the blot among many wealthy relatives, viz., that boys object to tips when they become young men. It cannot be too widely known that this is a very great mistake, and that the only error connected with money presents is not making them sufficiently large; but in almost all cases any trifle will be thankfully accepted. In a very few more years the Commissioner will retire from the service, for he is not likely to rise any higher, and he has had about enough of India. He cannot, however, make up his mind where he shall settle down and spend his modest thousand a year, which seems a very fair pension. It fades away, however, with appalling rapidity when a man has a wife and a numerous family with two or three boys at the wrong end of it. The Commissioner would like London, but fears the effects of Whitley, Gorrington and other tempters upon his susceptible daughters, and does not like the idea of himself becoming too great a frequenter of the Oriental. Cheltenham is too Anglo-Indian, and he does not want to hear anything more about rupees as long as he shall live. I think myself that he will not finally settle anywhere for a couple of years or so, but will leave his family and his tiger-skins in some conveniently central spot, and will himself require constant change for his liver's sake—either a week's shooting with his old assistant, who married the rich widow; or a run down to Brighton to walk on the pier, sniff the sea-breeze, and have a peep at Robinson's girls at school in one of the many seminaries of that attractive town.

RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION IN INDIA.

A correspondent contributes the following to the Indian Engineering:—The History of the Construction of Railways in India up to the present time may be divided into three periods—the Guaranteed Company period, the State Railway period, and the Kimberley—Chimerical or Chaotic—period, which is the present one. Lord Hartington may, indeed, claim to share the glory of having, by his half-hearted policy, produced the chaos, but as his successor in office, undeterred by continued failure, has again dared to take the reins of the India Office, the above designation ill do.

The Guaranteed period was distinguished by good solid work, but by a certain degree of extravagance, which was the inevitable result of the certainty of five per cent. interest on whatever amount might be spent combined with utter inexperience on the part of the Military Engineer officers whom the Government appointed to check the Railway Engineers.

The State period was marred by too violent reaction, with the result that a break of gauge was introduced into the system of main lines of communication; and minor errors may be noted, such as the use at first of rails of too light a section—which had soon to be replaced by heavier ones—the laying of railways within the limits of common roads, the attempt to do without fencing, and the cutting down of station accommodation to an undue extent. But the largest metre gauge State Railway, the Rajputana Malwa, and its North-Western continuation, the Rewari-Ferezpore Railway, together 1,412 miles of line, have been leased to a broad-gauge company, the Bombay, Baroda and Central India, until 1890, and already rumours are abroad that the whole of the leased lines are to be reconstructed on the broad gauge—thus justifying Sir James Fergusson's opinion, which he boldly expressed at the opening of the completed Rajputana Railway in January, 1881, that the metre gauge was "a great mistake." Within a short time from that date the strain on the rolling stock of the narrow gauge line, owing to it having to carry the through traffic between two large and level broad gauge railways over a line with steep grade and sharp curves, became so great that it was rapidly being worn out. The State Railway Engineers, however, many of whom had acquired their most recent experience on guaranteed lines introduced many valuable economies in construction, among which the adoption of steeper gradients, and the use of old rails for the framework of buildings, are conspicuous.

The Kimberley period ought to be, and probably is, distinguished by good engineering, the outcome of the experience gained in both of its precursors, but the ultimate cost of some lines will be much greater than it ought to have been, owing to the uncertain and shifty nature of the policy, or want of policy, of the Secretary of State, in pursuance of which a railway is begun in a hurry, then abandoned, and after years of discussion ordered to be constructed on a different gauge from that originally adopted, and by perhaps quite a different agency. But the most remarkable feature of the Kimberley period has been—the "private enterprise" dodge. This, indeed, was first invented by Lord Hartington, who, in his "epoch-making" despatch of January 6, 1881, strongly urged on the Government of India that when any reasonable prospect of success presented itself "an endeavour should be made to encourage the raising of capital, through private agency, on the exclusive security of the success of the undertaking." Any step in that direction would, his Lordship said, meet with his most cordial support and co-operation. What an "exclusive security" may be, in the abstract, we need not stop to inquire, but "illusory security of the problematical, or doubtful success of the undertaking" is a phrase that would better describe the bait which the deluded shareholders of the Central Bengal Railway Company were induced to swallow. This particular "private enterprise" has already broken down, and Government are now considering the question of how best to compensate the Company by making over to it some more paying enterprise. The Bengal and North-Western Railway shows much better prospects, because it has not been undertaken so directly in competition with cheaper water carriage, but even in this case the eminent capitalists who undertook to please Government could not float the shares until Government had yielded and given a limited guarantee. To do Lord Hartington justice, it must be said that the possibility of the failure of the private enterprise dodge was from the first within his contemplation, for in the despatch from which the above is quoted he added:—"In the event of its becoming apparent that the due execution of this policy is impracticable, it may become desirable to consider whether a modified system of guarantee might not advantageously be adopted. By a modified system, I mean one so restricted in respect to time and to the rate of interest guaranteed as to give the subscribers a real interest in the efficient and economical administration of the railway."

Here occurs the thought that the more business-like way of proceeding, with a view of relieving the State from the burden of the perpetual five per cent. guarantee, and at the same time providing for the construction of railways in India by private enterprise, would have been to announce that a perpetual guarantee at so high a rate would never again be given, and, if it did seem possible at once to fix the terms of a limited guarantee that should be applicable to all cases, to invite offers for each particular case. To say "I'll ne'er consent," and then to make the surrender of virtue, that has been necessary in the cases cited, is as humiliating as it is unbusiness-like.

THE BOUNDARY COMMISSION.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The separation of the Afghan Boundary Commissioners without having come to an agreement on the points submitted to them keeps alive one of the uncertainties which hung around our frontier policy. The other, of course, is the capacity or otherwise of the Ameer to maintain his authority against the tribes who are now in rebellion against him. While these elements in the problem remain uncertain as they still are, it is premature to speculate upon the part that events may force the Government of India to play. At the present moment there seems little to warrant the expectation of a forward move, political or military, on their part. No doubt the principles of the "Forward school" are influentially represented where the representation of them will not be without its influence upon our policy. But even aspirations wait upon events, and there is nothing in the events of the day to warrant the belief that the Government of India are preparing for or even contemplating an advance beyond the limits of the settlement of 1880. Much, but by no means everything, of course depends upon the turn that events may take in Afghanistan. Upon that subject rumour appears to have gone very much in advance of the facts of late. The Ameer has his troubles, no doubt, but they are not so formidable as has been represented, and he himself at all events has no misgivings as to his ability to overcome them. The situation, indeed, is one rather for watchfulness than for ostentatious preparation. Those who would save the Empire by going outside its gates to meet the threatening danger, would do so in entire disregard of the part that a strong and united Afghanistan is to play in our policy, and we are not sure that the hasty prosecution of the railway to Candahar, which might revive the old Afghan susceptibilities against the presence of the stranger in the land, would not weaken the Ameer's authority in his realm, and so militate against the success of a policy in which the strength and prestige of the Ameer are important factors. We must not yet assume either the failure of the Ameer to put down rebellion or that of the Cabinets of London and St. Petersburg to come to terms about the frontier on the Oxus. Yet one or both have to be assumed to warrant the belief that we are within easy reach of a marked change in our attitude of prepared observation.

BENGAL.

THE Englishman's Darjeeling correspondent reports, under date May 19, that Major Evans Gordon, the Superintendent of the Cooch Behar State, has been seriously ill from an acute attack of malarial fever, probably contracted during the late sporting season. He has been with difficulty removed to Darjeeling under Dr. Hendley's immediate care.

MR. A. H. GILES, District Superintendent of Police, Burdwan, has proceeded to Simla on special duty in connection with the reductions in police expenditure in Bengal suggested by the Public Service Commission. Mr. Giles will, it is said, visit the more important stations of the North-West to ascertain the directions in which economy is possible.

THE Englishman understands that a despatch is going home shortly, recommending to the India Office, for substantial reasons, the retention of the Agricultural Department, Bengal, the formation of which was sanctioned as a temporary measure only some three years ago. Mr. M. Finucane, who has steered the Department through its infancy, will continue in the capacity of Director.

A MEETING of Native gentlemen and others was held in Calcutta on the 11th May, Mr. E. E. Lewis, C.S., Commissioner of the Rajshaye Division, being in the chair. The following resolution was adopted:—"That, in the opinion of this meeting, a permanent memorial in honour of the Jubilee of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen Empress should be erected at Darjeeling, and that this memorial should take the form of a sanitarium for the accommodation of Indian gentlemen, their families and invalids from the plains."

AN important meeting of Assam tea planters was held at Silchar on May 23rd. Sixty-one planters attended, and as many as 101 were present by proxy. The chief object of the meeting was to protest against the repeal of Act XIII of 1859, which regulates the relations between planters and their labourers. It was resolved that the substitution of Act I. of 1882 would not prove satisfactory, "it being a crude and harsh measure, pressing with much severity on both parties, and entailing great expense on the gardens using it;" that what was required by the planters was an ample supply of labour, and that this labour must be secure and unfailing, to acquire which a railway was needed; and that it was necessary to impress the savages living on the Assam borders, so that the removal of the regiment at Silchar and to Shillong or elsewhere was most objectionable, particularly as the frontier police, though an excellent body of men, was not strong enough, and its efficiency was crippled for want of European leaders.

MADRAS.

THE death is announced of the well-known Mysore millionaire, Mr. Yellay Mullappah Chetty. The deceased was very munificent in public charities, founding, among other institutions, the Maternity Hospital in Bangalore for complaints of women. In recognition of his public charities the Viceroy bestowed upon him the title of Rai Bahadur on the occasion of the Imperial Proclamation.

THE coffee interests are looking up wonderfully. The Mysore New Planters' Association has been formed on an extensive scale. Coffee is scarce in the local market, and the price is rising steadily.

COLLECTIONS towards the Jubilee fund in Mysore proved very disappointing, only six or eight thousand rupees being available for the scheme of a Technical Library and Institute, the local memorial decided upon, which is estimated to cost Rs. 80,000. It is believed that the Mysore Government did not push the project sufficiently among the people of the province.

THE Madras Mail is informed that Messrs. R. G. Orr and Jer. Ryan have concluded a long lease with the Zemindar of Sivagunga in the Madura District. The lessees have undertaken to clear the estate of all encumbrances to the extent of seventeen lakhs of rupees, and have handsomely provided for the Zemindar and his family. The arrangement is purely a private enterprise, and in no way associated with anything like a company. Some idea of the magnitude of the transaction may be formed when we state that the Zemindary consists of 1,551 square miles, carrying a population of about 450,000 souls, living in 3,000 villages, and occupying some 90,000 houses. The annual tax payable to Government is nearly three lakhs of rupees. This is a somewhat novel enterprise, and it will be interesting to watch its development. Meanwhile we wish the lessees every success.

THE Madras Mail, in a retrospective article on education in that presidency, says that great achievements have been made in the field of education during Her Majesty's reign. A glimpse is also given of the early educational effort. Eleven years before the commencement of that reign Sir Thomas Munro caused an inquiry to be made into the state of education in Southern India, and recorded his views in a Minute which gave the first impulse to education in the presidency. Under his auspices fourteen Collectorates and eighty-one Taluk Schools were opened in 1826, with a school at Madras for training teachers. But these schools had to be abolished in 1836 for proved inefficiency. The Madras School for training teachers was converted into the High School, which afterwards developed into the Presidency College. A few Missionary bodies were meanwhile striving against serious difficulties to impart elementary knowledge chiefly through the medium of the vernacular languages. The only other educational agency in 1837 was the indigenous pial school and pata-sala, in which no attempt was made to train the intellect, but all that was aimed at was to load the memory with a string of words, of which the teacher knew the meaning little better than the pupil.

BOMBAY.

SURGEON H. McCALMAN, M.B., M.D., C.M., has been granted one year's furlough.

MAJOR LYON, who was mauled by a tiger at Karlee, is slowly progressing towards recovery.

LIEUT. HON. H. YARDE-BULLER, 6th Battalion Rifle Brigade, has been appointed an extra Aide-de-Camp to the Governor of Bombay.

CAPTAIN R. BAILEY, 20th Bombay Native Infantry, has been appointed to perform the duties of cantonment magistrate, Deesa, in addition to his other duties.

As a temporary arrangement, Mr. A. E. Hight, assistant engineer, 1st grade, on return from furlough, will act as executive engineer for irrigation, Khandesh.

THE Bishop of Bombay has sailed for Aden by the P. and O. s.s. Sutlej, accompanying his eldest child, who has been ordered to Europe with typhoid fever.

THE Hyderabad Government will receive payment of the Berar surplus for the official year, which terminated in March in Hyderabad, and not in Bombay as was the case last year. The surplus will probably amount to twenty-three lakhs of Halli Sicca rupees.

THE late Sir Salar Jung's debts amount to upwards of thirty-two lakhs of rupees. His Highness the Nizam has very generously consented to pay thirty lakhs towards their liquidation, and an inquiry is now being conducted in the Accountant-General's office in all claims preferred. Many of them include very large sums for interest, which it may be possible to reduce so as to bring the amount payable down to thirty lakhs, the sum sanctioned by his Highness.

THE tiger which mauled Major Lyons at Khandalla recently was found dead on the evening of the 18th May, and is said to have been the largest seen in that district for some years past. It measured nine feet ten inches by three feet five inches.

THE State of Jamnagar, in Kathiawar, appears to require the attention of Government. The Bombay Gazette says:—"The trouble there seem to be as serious as they were when we directed attention to the matter four months ago. The general allegation that the Jam, Hindu Rajput though he is, allows himself to be influenced by Mahomedan advisers to the oppression of his Hindu subjects, continues to be made. People who took a leading part in the Mohurram disturbances are said to have had posts in the police given to them. Raja Khivas, the Mussulman chief of Customs, who has become the virtual Dewan of Jamnagar, has looked well after the interests of his co-religionists, taking into the service of the State men whose only recommendation seems to be that they have taken an active part in tumultuous demonstrations against the Hindus, who form a majority in the population. The country generally is said to be unsafe, and to be at the mercy of gangs of outlaws, whom the police either do not dare or do not care to attack. One gang of about fifty is spoken of as becoming a terror to the Jam's subjects. His police even seem to be afraid of them, as may be seen from the strange story which came from Padana, near which place the gang entered a police station, and would have carried off the chowkidar's weapons had not the terrified defenders of the peace fallen on their knees and begged for mercy. The Jam seems to be a weak ruler, though his intentions, like those of all weak rulers, are said to be good. He appears to have fallen into bad hands, and his State is going to mischief."

NORTH-WEST PROVINCES, OUDE, AND PUNJAB.

THE Select Committee on the Punjab Land Bills were to hold their first meeting in Simla in the course of the first week in June.

THE name of Major-General Black, C.S.I., has been added to the board of visitors of the Lahore Veterinary School.

THE Government of the N.W.P. and Oudh have, on the recommendation of the Finance Committee, agreed to a substantial reduction being made in the allowance granted for the annual migration to Naini Tal.

SYAP DILAWAR ALI, District Judge of Gujranwala, Lahore, has been offered by Colonel Marshall, and has accepted, subject to the sanction of Government, the registrarship of the High Court of Hyderabad Deccan. The Nizam will obtain in him an officer of energy and considerable judicial experience.

ANTHRAX is still raging in a virulent form at Umballa among the horses of the G-A and N-B Royal Horse Artillery and the Bays; also private horses have been attacked.

It is under consideration to reduce the tolls levied on various bridges of the North-Western Railway. None of the tolls are fixed at a maximum rate. Legal proceedings are likely to be taken by the contractors for the Attock Bridge tolls against the Secretary of State in connection with the boatmen of the Attock ferry.

ABOUT eleven o'clock on the evening of the 23rd May, a riot was caused by seventy or eighty sepoys attacking some Bengalee Baboos at the Railway Theatre, Mooltan. The Baboos were performing the Battle of Plassey, and had invited some Native officers of the Cavalry and Infantry of the station. A number of sepoys of the 25th Punjab Infantry came with heavy sticks, and after obtaining permission to enter, behaved themselves so badly that some of them were asked to leave the room, which annoyed them. They formed up outside of the door and began to beat the Baboos unmercifully about the head with sticks. A few Europeans who sat near the door got some rather severe blows. Mr. Vaughan, district inspector, Railway Police, who was in the vicinity, got six policemen together and managed to capture two of the ring-leaders.

LATEST accounts from Herat show that that place is quiet, no signs of rebellion against the Ameer's authority being visible. The rumours from Kandahar that the Herat garrison had mutinied, says an up-country paper, are evidently unfounded, though precautions were wisely taken by the Ameer's officers on the news of the revolt in the Hotak country. These consisted in arranging that no excessive number of Ghilzais should remain in any one regiment, and with this object in view certain transfers of soldiers were made among the various battalions.

SOME days ago the Director of Public Instruction at Lahore offered a reward of Rs. 500 and a free pardon to any person who gave information as to the manner in which the recent Arts Examination questions of the Punjab University were divulged before the examination took place.

SOME days ago, a lad was lying sick in the Ripon Hospital at Simla, when, according to the local paper, a Christian lady introduced herself into his room, and presented him with a Protestant tract. The lad being connected with the Roman Catholic community, the priest was duly informed of the act, and Father O'Dea brought the infringement of the rules of the hospital to the notice of those connected with the institution. The result is that a notice has been put up prohibiting any interference in the religion of those who may be patients in the hospital.

A JUDICIAL OFFICER lately discovered that people who resort to that delightful sanitarium, Murree, need not pay their debts. It happened thus:—The Judicial Officer, on being deputed to Murree, was invested with the powers of a Small Cause Judge; but as soon as he proceeded to exercise his functions in such capacity, he discovered that the Legislature had never extended the Small Cause Court Act to Murree. His predecessors had heard and determined suits, and the one immediately preceding had left a case cut and dried for him to pass final orders upon; but he quashed the proceedings, and a reference to the Chief Court elicited the pleasing fact that the Judicial Officer was right, and that Murree had no Small Cause Court!

BURMA.

JOURNALISM is progressing in Upper Burma. The Mandalay Herald, which was started a few months ago in Theebaw's late capital, has been enlarged, and the proprietor promises still further improvement.

THE Irrawaddy Flotilla Company has put on another steamer for mail service between Prome and Mandalay, and communications are now twice a week.

THE Chief Commissioner of Burma has intimated to the Deputy Commissioners of the Hanthawaddy, Tharawaddy, and Shwaygyeen Districts that unless a marked improvement is made in suppressing dacoity and other violent crimes in these districts within the next four months, severe notice will be taken.

NINETY Chinese Shans, men, women, and children, having come into Bhamo and represented to the Deputy Commissioner there that they were compelled to flee from the village of Sanda on account of the cruelty of the Chinese soldiery, and that they were desirous of coming and settling in Lower Burma, have been granted a passage to Rangoon at Government expense. They are likely, it is said, to go to Pegu.

FOR the present (says the Pioneer) the medical administration of Upper Burma is to be distinct from that of the Lower Province. The Principal Medical Officer of the Field Force at Mandalay is vested with the civil medical control of Upper Burma, and he has a surgeon of the Indian Medical Service to assist him as civil secretary. The new medical organisation is for the purpose of supplying medical aid to the large police force scattered all over the country and to the civil population. At present no medical officers will be appointed exclusively for civil work, except at Mandalay, where a medical officer has been posted specially for civil duty, owing to the size of the town and consequent large amount of work that will devolve on the civil surgeon. There are sixteen districts in Upper Burma excluding Mandalay. To each of these a military surgeon is appointed in civil medical charge, in addition to his ordinary military duties. For this he will draw an extra allowance of Rs. 100 a month.

THE SUEZ CANAL COMPANY.

The general meeting of the Suez Canal Company was held in Paris on the 8th inst., under the presidency of M. Ferdinand de Lesseps. The report presented on the occasion states that notwithstanding the expensive works which are being carried out the diminution of the dividend per share will only be from 82f. 50c. to 75f. The directors attribute the diminution in the receipts to the general causes which during the last two years have unfavourably affected commercial and industrial operations all over the world, and more especially enterprises connected with the shipping trade. The returns of European railways and of the best established navigation companies have been reduced. It is hoped, however, that general requirements remaining the same, there will be a recovery in traffic proportioned to the duration of the time of depression through which we have passed. The commerce of European countries, it is added, is, in consequence of the constant diminution of stocks, now perceptibly augmenting. There has been a considerable increase in freight, due to the intelligent prudence of shipbuilders in Europe and greater activity in Asia. The increase of the surface under cultivation in British Burmah, the progressive extension of the Indian railways, and of canals, roads, railways, and harbours in Java, the Philippines, Tong-Kong, and China, the increase of the fleets of the 15 principal companies doing business with the Canal, the inauguration of the two German postal lines to China and Australia, the expected formation of a new service of Messageries Maritimes between Marseilles and Madagascar, are regarded as evidence of the return of business. The notable increase in the Canal receipts for May, 1817, exceeding by 730,000f. those of the corresponding month of 1886, was the consequence. In spite of these indications, however, the directors have not thought it prudent to interfere with the available reserve. The dividend which they recommend is derived entirely from the revenue of 1886. The meeting after an exchange of views between the board and several of the shareholders sanctioned the proposals submitted by the directors, together with the resolutions approving the accounts and fixing the dividend at 75f. 33c. The meeting also agreed to the re-election of the four directors, including Mr. John Slagg and M. Herbette, the French Ambassador in Berlin.

SLIGHTLY SEVERE.—We cult the following from the Indian Witness:—The Times of India thinks that obstacles to social intercourse between Hindoos and Europeans are of native manufacture. Caste and female degradation constitute the "impassable gulf." While this view may be seriously doubted in some quarters, still it will be difficult to completely upset it. It has been said that "Satan invented the Chinese language for the purpose of keeping foreigners out of China." With a greater show of truthfulness, may it be said that caste, female degradation, and all the mummery of tactile defilement bear the marks of the inventive enemy. Men accustomed to use their reason in matters social and religious, must be impressed that the religious and social customs of the Hindoos were never adapted to a poor people. The hoary systems of India are pre-eminently adapted to unfit men for practical life, to narrow, impoverish, and oppress men with grievous and sore burdens. The orthodox Hindoo is indisputably related to the "bond woman."

Not often, says the Civil and Military Gazette, do we find the great Indian nation setting itself to grapple with the mysteries of the British Army in India. When it does, its suggestions for reform are extensive and peculiar. Here are a few taken at random from what purports to be a serious consideration of military defences. Cooper's Hill should become the Indian Woolwich, and Rurki the Indian Sandhurst; supplying at the same time the staff of the Public Works, telegraphs, and forest; but all men from Cooper's Hill should be borne on the Army List and commissioned accordingly. In time of war they could be used up. Rurki should turn out officers of the Subadar and Jemadar classes with a touch of telegraphs and forests in their composition. Native regiments are over-officered. There should be only four English officers, including a happy Adjutant, who would be "a sort of Adjutant, Musketry Instructor, Quartermaster, Pay Master, and Transport officer, all rolled into one." This confidence in the powers of the British officer is touching, though slightly exaggerated. That Adjutant would die. All British regiments are over-officered; wherefore all officers save the Commandant, Adjutant, Quartermaster, and one officer per company should be allowed to live at home on English pay; only engaging to join, when required, at their own expense. The Feudatory States in time of peace should have one European officer to supervise each brigade. And in time of war, one Englishman per battalion. Without in the faintest degree wishing to disparage well-intentioned efforts to lighten the burden on Sir Frederick Roberts' shoulders, we would venture to suggest that, for the present at least, discussion of political reforms would be a less ridiculous pursuit in Lower Bengal. There are fewer facts in politics, and large fields for imagination. Whereas in the army facts are still—it may be foolishly—considered of importance.

FORWARD, OR STANDFAST POLICY.

TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,—I think it would be more satisfactory to many readers of your paper if you took the clear line in support of the "Standfast Policy" as regards the north-west frontier of our Indian Empire. You have quoted with great effect on that behalf from the Ministers of Lord Lawrence and his colleagues in 1867-9 which comprise statements of facts and arguments that have never been refuted. It is true that since that period those counsels have been disregarded, and another impregnable frontier has been wantonly weakened by its being thrust out from inside, or rather it has been left behind our military outposts, contrary to the emphatic advice of Lord Napier and other military authorities. But I trust you may be able to do something to prevent any further aggravation of the grievous mistake of thrusting our forces far beyond the natural frontier of India. Though owing to unworthy fears and weak counsels our frontier policy has been made at once defiant and dangerous, we cannot alter the physical geography of Beluchistan, nor transform the political instincts of the Afghans.

Hence it may still be hoped that Viscount Cross, and he is solely responsible, as with him rests all the power, will not sanction any further advance towards Kandahar in spite of the too well-founded rumours about local preparations to that intent. It is even alleged that Sir Frederick Roberts is inclined to that perilous policy, therefore it is desirable to call to mind his own very distinct professional opinion against such advance.

In that gallant commander's despatch from Kabul, in May, 1880, he wrote:—"We have nothing to fear from Afghanistan, and the best thing to do is to leave it as much as possible to itself. . . . Should Russia in future years attempt to conquer Afghanistan, or invade India through it, we should have a better chance of attaching the Afghans to our interest, if we avoid all interference with them in the meantime. . . . The longer and more difficult the line of communication is, the more numerous and greater the obstacles which Russia would have to overcome; and so far from shortening one mile of the road, I would let the web of difficulties extend to the very mouth of the Khyber Pass"—and, we may add, the Bolan also.

Now it seems to me that nothing can add to the insight and comprehensiveness of these conclusions.

One more topic: Will you kindly explain in your next issue on what treaty or engagement Sir John Gorst could be relying when last week he asserted that the British position extends to Chaman, on the western slope of the Amran largest points.

AN ANGLO-INDIAN.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE.*

Coleridge the poet entered life with the disadvantage of possessing a strange father. What can be the influence for good on a highly susceptible mind if a scholar (which he was) who, by way of simplifying the terms used in a Latin grammar, transmogrifies the ablative into the "quale-quare-quidditive case?" Where is teaching by example when an injunction to "put on a clean shirt every day" is construed so literally that the old garment is left on, and the fresh linen put on top thereof? The son of such a strange father, Coleridge was in turn a strange son. He never jogged along quite right with the world; his homely and unconventional habits; his utter unworldliness in the way of money; his bitter sarcasms and biting irony made enemies and estranged friends; and, to crown all, his utter indifference to the demands of punctuality, his entire indifference as to any arrangements with his employers, left him as a butt for the shafts of fate and the arrows of fortune. What could society do with a man who, when starting a newspaper, did not get the number which should have appeared on July 15th ready till August 10th? How was Mrs. Grundy to act when she found the hapless poet again and again entering into contracts to write certain verses, only, alas! to disappoint the publisher and irritate the careless man of letters' best friends.

So, too, in domestic life he was alike "higgledy-piggledy." When daily bread for his family and himself depended upon his own exertions he was immovable. Not a line would he, or perhaps could he, write. The res angustæ domi had no concern for him. So love fitted from such an abode of unrest. What woman could put up with such a romantic, unsympathetic husband—not a bread-winner so much as a dreamer of dreams?

* "Samuel Taylor Coleridge," J. Alois Brandt, English Edition, by Lady Eastlake. (John Murray.)

They separated. The chapter was sad, but it might have been sadder, for on neither side did the tongue of scandal cast aspersions as to rectitude of conduct—the twain lived and died unspotted, unstained, but unsuited. It is the history of many a shattered home. The fame of the actors alone lends attraction to a scene too common otherwise to attract notice.

Mr. Brandt tells the tale of this weird existence with all the minuteness of criticism which characterises the German form of biography. He analyses the characteristics of the works which stamp Coleridge as head of the romantic school of poets in this country. He shows clearly how largely ill-health and ill-habits affected the writings of a man who was himself a reflex of the strange characters he sketched upon the pages of immortality. He has studied his hero, and presented to the public a most complete and exhaustive series of essays upon this most peculiar of poets. Thanks to Lady Eastlake's admirable translation, the German writer's masterly volume is accessible to all who care to think out for themselves the problem of life presented by the career of the one man who in the history of manhood could conceive the ghostly and preternatural lay of the "Ancient Mariner."

THE ANGLO-INDIAN CODES.*

In 1834 the first Indian Law Commission employed themselves in the preparation of a draft Penal Code as a part of the large design for the general revision of the Civil and Criminal Law of India. Since that date much has been done; three further Commissions have sat, deliberated, and helped in the direction in question. Act after Act has been passed for the purpose of simplifying the law, of making it more intelligible and less conflicting—still the codification remains incomplete and fragmentary. The attempt has been relegated to "pigeon-holes." Mr. Whitley Stokes in his general introduction laments this insouciance, and pleads that it is opposed to the wishes of the people. Of course, no private individual, albeit specially trained in the ways of law, and specially distinguished in those paths as is the late Law Member of the Governor-General, can cope with a task which must of necessity devolve upon a Commissioner, but he has done what is in his power to help matters, for he has taken in hand the codification which does exist, and has presented it to the public in a clear, concise, and explanatory form. To use his own words, "Repeals and amendments effected by subsequent legislation are shown in their proper places. Each code is preceded by an introduction, giving a general view of its objects and contents, pointing out its principal divergencies from English law, and making suggestions for its amendment. The foot-notes to the sections embody or refer to the rulings of the Indian High Courts on their wording, and the English decisions on which many of them are founded. It is hoped that such a work will be useful in India, not only to the judges, legal practitioners, and law students, for whom it is primarily intended, but also to bankers, traders, public servants, and future legislators; and that in England and the colonies it will be welcome to lawyers who have to advise on Indian settlements, titles, and contracts; to merchants and others transacting business with India; to candidates for the Indian Civil Service; to all who take an interest in the efforts of English statesmen to confer on India the blessings of a wise, clear, and ascertainable law; and especially to those who are interested in what is still, in London and New York, the burning question of codification."

The value of a work of this nature depends entirely upon the way in which it is carried out. In this respect the choice of an editor has been most judicious. Mr. Whitley Stokes has wide experience; his judgment is sober, and his suggestions merit the attention due to keen intellect and careful thought.

VICTORIA REGINA ET IMPERATRIX.†

"Victoria" is a noble tribute of passionate loyalty, a Jubilee song from Ireland. The "wild harp of Erin" is bade to awake and breathe the softer strains of love. Hatred is to be set aside, "the voice of happier days" is to pour forth "melodious joys and raptures deep and clear." "Revenge and hate their frenzy spent" are to give way to the gentler seductions of peace, joy, and thanksgiving. To this every loyal citizen of the Empire can only mutter an emphatic amen. What Ireland is cannot be disproved by any oratorical or poetical effusion; what she ought to be is well and effectively told in Mr. Armstrong's masterly ode, an opportune and welcome addition to the Jubilee literature of this Jubilee Year of Grace.

THE RECORDS OF THE INDIA OFFICE.—II.

WITH reference to certain remarks which we made in our last issue concerning the compilation of the above records, it appears that we were in error in hinting that the dilatoriness in giving these papers to the public was owing to niggardliness on the part of Her Majesty's Treasury. That department, we are informed, has nothing to do with the India Office. This may or may not be a matter for regret, but it is certainly to be regretted that a liberal grant has not been given from some quarter to carry out expeditiously a valuable work of national importance and interest. At present the labour appears to have been borne by Mr. F. C. Danvers alone, or with such assistance as he can obtain in his department during moments snatched from time which has to be devoted to current official routine work. This is hardly fair, for although he has done the work well and conscientiously—it being evidently a labour of love to him—the task is one to try to the utmost the energies and patience of any single individual, however enthusiastic he may be. To wade through thousands of volumes and papers which have hitherto been put together in the roughest and most careless manner required a very bold effort; but this Mr. Danvers made, and he is now reaping the reward of his success in the gratification which he will afford to many students of Indian history, but it is to be hoped that his reward will be ultimately something more substantial, and that, in the meantime, some steps will be taken to afford him more assistance in this important and valuable work. How troublesome the labour already incurred has been may be judged from the fact that the preliminary examination of the various collections of the documents with which he had to deal before attempting to classify them occupied about twelve months, and the preparation of the first part of the first volume of his report took eighteen months more. The preparation of the subsequent parts will, it is to be hoped—especially if Government be liberal—occupy less time, but the work to be done is still immense, and will demand much time and labour. It will be no easy matter to compress records extending over 300 years into a few volumes, in which all which is valuable shall be retained, and all redundant matter excluded. But this is the task which Mr. Danvers has set himself to accomplish. Judging from the instalment he has given us, the task will be well performed, and all who are interested in the history of our Indian Empire must wish him every success.

The first volume will contain a report on the records relating to the Agencies, Factories, and Settlements which are not now under the administration of the Government of India. The first part of this volume which has just been issued deals with the records relating to Java, Sumatra, Borneo, the Straits Settlements, St. Helena, the Cape of Good Hope, and the French in India. The remainder of the volume will embrace the records relating to China, Japan, the Moluccas, Ceylon, Persia, Egypt, the Overland Route, the search for the North-West Passage, and the Dutch and Portuguese in the East. A richer bill of literary fare could hardly be placed before a reader, and it is satisfactory to learn that the whole of the "dainty dish" will soon be on the public table.

Not less interesting or less eagerly looked for will be the volume which it is reported will immediately follow, giving the early Marine records of the old East India Company. These, we believe, are to be followed by the records relating to India proper, which will be arranged chronologically, with separate classifications for those records which relate to the different Factories, Settlements, and Presidencies.

These volumes will be followed by others containing a brief early history of India, and a more detailed account from the commencement of the East India Company's operations in 1600 to the year 1661, when a new charter was granted to the Company by Charles II. Then from the year 1661 to 1706, when the Union between the London and the English East India Companies was completed, and from this union to the final departure of Clive from India in 1767. Another volume will deal with the period from 1767 to the end of the administration of Lord Wellesley in 1805. This will be followed by an account carrying on the records to the expiration of the East India Company's Commercial Charter in 1834. The concluding volumes will cover the periods from the revised charter granted to the Company in 1834 to the transfer of the Government to the Crown in 1858, and from that year to the latest date.

From this hurried synopsis it will be seen that the work contemplated is one of the great magnitude, and requiring great industry, intelligence, and research. It will be a magnum opus, but its importance and interest will be admitted by all, and we wish every good speed to Mr. Danvers in his undertaking. He not only deserves success, but we feel sure that he will gain it.

THE administration of the Horse-Breeding Operations Department will shortly be transferred from the control of the Military Secretariat of the Government of India to that of the Revenue and Agricultural Secretariat.

THE P. AND O. COMPANY.

The commanders in the P. and O. Company, in recognition of the merits of Mr. Henry Bayley, who has been for over forty years connected with the company, and who has now partially retired from the management, have presented that gentleman with a very handsome testimonial. The address accompanying it is signed by all the commanders, and is as follows:—

London, May, 1887.

To Henry Bayley, Esq., &c., &c., &c.,

Dear Sir,—We, the commanders in the service of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, having seen the announcement of your partial retirement from the active duties of the management, embrace the opportunity to request your acceptance of a small souvenir expressive of our esteem and regard. Many of our number owe their advancement in life to your kindly offices, while to those who have met with misfortunes, which are almost inseparable from a long career at sea, as well as to the widows and orphans of our colleagues who have passed away, you have ever been a generous and sympathetic friend. We trust that the form of our humble but spontaneous testimonial will commend itself to your approval, it being an emblem of your connection with that great company with which you have been so long and honourably associated.—Wishing you improved health and every happiness.

The testimonial is a handsome inkstand, with proper devices, and the arms of the company and H. B. It is the work of Mr. Benson.

For a fortnight a large number of workmen were busily engaged in making arrangements for the comfort of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught on board the P. and O. steamer Sutlej. Two saloon cabins, containing six berths, on the starboard side of the Sutlej were converted into one splendid apartment, with two berths, for their Royal Highness's convenience, while in addition to this the captain's room on the saloon quarter-deck was specially furnished for his Royal Highness. On the whole, the arrangements reflect the greatest credit on Captain A. H. Johnson (the commander), and Mr. Long, the first officer of the ship, who personally superintended the work.

WE are accustomed to extraordinary statements in vernacular prints regarding the effect of British rule on the prosperity of India; but a Jhelum paper has beaten the record. Impressed by the fact that wheat prices have gone up in the Punjab within the last few months, the writer comes to the conclusion that this rise is due to the export trade in wheat. After this brilliant aperçu regarding economic cause and effect we are somewhat better prepared for the assertion that before the export trade in wheat famines were unknown, and that famines are, therefore, directly attributable to railways. Evidently the rulers of India, with their gigantic railway schemes and Famine Insurance Funds, have been wandering in economic darkness. We should like to hear the Jhelum writer's opinion on the disastrous effect of roads and rivers on the prosperity of the districts through which they pass.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

A GENERAL ORDER has been issued by the Commander-in-Chief upon the misconduct of the 3rd Gurkhas last year arising from their claims to compensation. Colonel Lyster, who vacated the command of the regiment in 1885, is censured for signing compensation certificates which contained misrepresentations of fact and for lax interpretation of his duty towards the Government. The Chief expresses regret at having to notice a matter involving discredit to an officer of long and gallant service, but he is compelled to do so as it involved the regiment in serious trouble.

A COMPLIMENT, small in its way, and yet one that will doubtless be appreciated, has been paid by the Viceroy to the Barma Field Force. Two officers from Native regiments serving with the force are to join his Excellency's Staff at Simla as extra Aides-de-Camp.

In connection with the mobilisation scheme for placing an army corps on the frontier, careful calculations are being made of the carrying capacity of the Sind-Peshin and Bolan Railways, and special military time-tables will be prepared similar to those already in existence for the main lines in India in Mr. David Ross's valuable book on "Military Railway Transport."

A REDUCTION has been made in the Judge Advocate-General's Department, Madras, by the absorption of No. 2 Circle into Nos. 1 and 3, and renumbering of Nos. 3 and 4, as Nos. 2 and 3, respectively. Consequently on this reduction, Captain Welch vacates his appointment, but will officiate in No. 3 Circle until the return of Lieutenant Colonel Shaw from furlough.

THE recent Army Warrant regulating promotion and retirement is being digested by the Indian military authorities at Simla. Its provisions naturally affecting many officers serving in this country, there are likely to be the usual numerous references to the Horse Guards on obscure and doubtful points. In some cases, at least of deserving regimental officers, appeals for special consideration will be submitted, but whether they will be entertained is another question.

THE Government of India have formally accorded sanction to the formation of Volunteer Reserves at Calcutta and Bombay as Presidency towns. They have further approved of Major Bissett's scheme for similar Reserves on the Bombay-Baroda Railway, and have empowered the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal to form Reserves in Chota Nagpur, where it is believed that Europeans scattered at various places will join the movement. Each reservist will get a rifle, bayonet and accoutrements, and be entitled to draw 50 rounds of ammunition per annum. Simple shooting tests will be imposed for efficiency. The capitation grant will be Rs. 10, with Rs. 5 for clothing.

A MORE than ordinarily revolting murder has apparently been committed by three men of the Worcester regiment belonging to a detachment, which is now roadmaking between Quetta and Kach, being encamped about nine miles from the headquarters station. These men had been into Quetta and were on their way back when they met a Pathan and his wife. They insulted the woman, and then when the man remonstrated, set upon him and deliberately stoned him to death. The woman identified one of the men, who thereupon turned Queen's evidence, and the three are now under arrest and awaiting trial.

A SOWAR of the 16th Bengal Cavalry was accidentally shot a few days ago at Jullundur while some of the regiment were going through their usual morning practice. The sowar had been stationed some distance away from the butts to keep the road clear. He left his post to get a drink of water, when a bullet, which had evidently ricocheted, lodged in his stomach. The man has since died of his wound.

COLONEL SMART, Commanding R.A., Bangalore division, succeeds Major-General A. C. Johnson, R.A., who has been ordered to Ireland, in command of the Eastern district.

THE Governor-General in Council has sanctioned the formation of a 4th Administrative Battalion of Volunteers in the North-West Provinces, to be constituted of the Ghazipur Volunteer Rifle Corps and the Ghazipur and Gorakhpur Corps of Light Horse. In other words, the Ghazipur Volunteers have attained the status of a battalion.

In the eyes of Anglo-Indians who are fain, at too much risk, to content themselves with the tinned article, the Central Asian steppes will not lose any of their interest from the discovery of a new and splendid species of asparagus heralded by an article in a recent Standard. To an epicure there must be something maddening in the notion that he has been kept all his life from an asparagus which rivals in delicacy the best European kinds, and has stalks six feet long, and thick as a man's arm. It must be confessed, however, that for the present, this wonderful Akhal-Tekke vegetable has something apocryphal as well as delicate in its flavour.

THE NEW COINAGE.

Although fifty years have elapsed since the accession of Queen Victoria to the Throne, the effigy seen on the obverse of British coins, which was adopted in 1837, still remains in use. This effigy of the Queen was modelled by the late Mr. William Wyon, R.A., modeller and engraver to the Mint, and the only variation which has occurred is that which was made in connection with the florin. On this coin Her Majesty is represented wearing the arched crown, while on all others she is represented without a crown. The present year of Jubilee was therefore rightly deemed to be a fitting occasion for substituting for the present effigy on our coins one which shall present a likeness of the Sovereign as her people now know her. During the past year Her Majesty signified her pleasure that a portrait medallion by Mr. J. E. Boehm, R.A., modelled from life, should be substituted for the effigy which the coins have hitherto borne. In the new effigy, which is lifelike and dignified, the Queen appears crowned and veiled, and wearing the Riband and Star of the Garter and the Victoria and Albert Order. The legend "Victoria, Dei Gratia Britanniarum Regina, Fidei Defensor," is used, but is arranged differently on the various coins according to the exigencies of the design on each. The change in the obverse afforded an opportunity, of which advantage was taken, for making some alterations in the designs for the reverse of some of the coins. In the new issue the reverse of the sovereign will continue to bear the design of St. George and the Dragon by Pistrucci, which was first adopted on the sovereigns of George IV. The reverses of the half-sovereign and threepenny piece will also remain unchanged, with the exception that in each case the crown will be assimilated to that used for the new effigy, which is an arched crown. The St. George and the Dragon design will be resumed for the five-pound piece, the double florin, and the crown piece, this design having been adopted for these rarely seen coins when they were originally struck. The half-crown will bear the reverse it bore when first issued, and this is a design of considerable merit by Merlin. It consists of the Royal arms, similar to those borne on the half-sovereign, but surmounted by the arched crown and surrounded by the Garter, which is again surrounded by the delicate network of the collar of the Garter. The shilling and the sixpence will bear on their reverses the Royal arms crowned and surrounded by the Garter only. The Jubilee issue will include a new coin which will be added to the present circulation. This will be a double florin, the obverse of which will bear the new effigy of Her Majesty, while the reverse will be composed of four crowned shields bearing the arms of the United Kingdom, and being similar to those on the reverse of the present florin. The shields are arranged in the form of a cross, as at present, but instead of having Gothic cusps, and the spaces filled in by the national floral emblems, the shields will be divided by four sceptres radiating from the centre of the coin, in which is the Star of the Order of the Garter. This device is strikingly simple, but very elegant, and was first adopted in the coins of Charles II. The same design will for the future appear on the reverse of the florin. The issue of the new coins will appropriately begin on the 21st inst., that being the day appointed for the celebration of Her Majesty's Jubilee. It has further been the Queen's pleasure to command that the fiftieth year of her accession should be commemorated by the issue of a medal. The effigy for this medal, like that for the coins, is from a medallion by Mr. Boehm. It has, however, a somewhat more ornate veil than the effigy on the coins, and, in addition to the Victoria and Albert Order on the bust, the badge of the Imperial Order of the Crown of India is shown. The medals in silver and bronze will be three inches in diameter, and the reverse will be a symbolical group from the design of Sir Frederic Leighton, President of the Royal Academy. In the centre a figure representing the British Empire sits enthroned, the right hand resting on the sword of justice and the left holding the symbol of victorious rule. On each side of the throne a lion is partially seen, while at the feet of the figure lies Mercury, the god of commerce, holding up in one hand a shallow cup heaped with gold. Opposite to Mercury and on the left proper of the throne is seated on its steps the genius of steam and electricity. On each side of the figure of Empire stand the personified elements of its greatness. On the left proper are Industry and Agriculture, and on the right proper are typified Science, Letters, and Art. Above the figure of Empire the occasion of the celebration commemorated is expressed by two winged figures representing the years 1837 and 1887, each holding a wreath. The year 1887 is depicted as advancing, while 1837 is shown with averted head. Where the wreaths held by the figures interlock, the letters V.R.I. appear, and over all are the words "In commemoration." Beneath the lowest step of the throne on which Empire is seated are five shields banded together and bearing the names of the five parts of the globe, Europe, Asia, Africa, America, and Australasia, over which the Empire extends. The medal as a whole is a fine work of art, and its issue, like that of the new coinage, will begin on the Jubilee celebration day.

The Australian Trading World in an article on "The British Dollar" says:—"It is clear that as a dollar, always convertible into gold at a fixed price, the English dollar will very soon assume a commanding position, not only in the monetary system of the United Kingdom, but in point of fact it will 'impinge' very much upon the currency of other nations. We are quite aware that this coin will only be issued for service in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and for the colonies where a sterling currency has been adopted—that is to say, the Australasian colonies—but the dollar is largely used in matters of accounts, and also in actual currency in Canada, in South Africa, and in the West India Islands, and it is perfectly within reason to suppose that a coin issued by the British Government as of the sterling value of 4s., or five to the pound, will for all practical purposes be as current in these places as the gold sovereign. We do not for a moment lose sight of the fact that silver coin within the United Kingdom can only be legally tendered in payment of debts to the extent of 40s., but practically the adaptation of a coin to the want of the English community throughout the world makes that coin the standard coin in use, and it must in course of time produce a very powerful 'trespass' on the coinage of such countries as at present use the silver dollar of about the same value. Our argument in support of this theory is a very simple one. The actual metal currency of a country is simply that which is needed for the daily retail transactions; the value of the pound sterling is the well-known unit of value throughout the world, free from all complexities of exchange value; therefore, if an English dollar is usable and negotiable as the fifth of a pound sterling and is for all practical purposes so exchangeable, it at once assumes a position of intrinsic importance, second only to that of the actual golden sovereign, and if there is an inequality in fact, that is compensated by its increased value in the matter of divisibility. Having stated the case so far, we are not going to shut our eyes to the practical working of the case. The first element in the consideration is clearly this—Will the Mint authorities issue such a quantity of the new dollars as will serve to support or supply the medium of such a circulation as we have spoken of? Candidly we must say we do not think they will. The profit on the transaction is so large that it will at once check the use of it. The new dollar or 4s. piece will cost the Mint authorities about 36d., and the very fact of the profit being so large, some 33 per cent., will prevent the Exchequer realising it, and very properly so too. But can they prevent it? We think not. Let us look at it from a trader's point of view—profit and convenience. We will say a fair issue of these dollar coins is made. They disappear naturally. A further demand is made through bankers for more of these coins. Can it be legitimately refused? We say certainly not, and especially as the issue yields a large profit. So the legitimate use of the coin, whether domestic, colonial, or foreign, must be supplied."

MEETING OF THE BIMETALLIC LEAGUE.

The annual general meeting of the Bimetallic League was held at the Cannon-street Hotel on the 15th inst. Sir J. Whittaker Ellis, M.P., presided, and among those present were Count Bylandt, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Mr. S. Montagu, M.P., Sir G. Campbell, M.P., Colonel Tomline, and Messrs. B. White, M.P., J. Hoyle, M.P., Henry H. Gibbs (president of the League), H. R. Grenfell, R. L. Everitt (Ipswich), R. Barclay (Manchester), F. B. Forbes, S. Ogden (Manchester), J. H. Howell (Bristol), P. F. Tidman, J. H. Gwyther, C. MacDonald (Manchester), and J. S. Dods (Manchester).

The Chairman, in expressing his pleasure at presiding, said he believed that when he was Lord Mayor he had the honour of initiating the movement as far as London was concerned. He was very pleased to see among them representatives of China and Japan. He was very glad to see that the movement in favour of bimetallicism was engaging the attention not only of commercial men but of political economists.

Mr. H. H. Gibbs proposed the first resolution:—"That this meeting notices with satisfaction the increasing interest taken in the monetary question throughout the country, and pledges itself to renewed efforts to bring about a resumption of free coinage of silver in international accord with the other Great Powers." He referred with satisfaction to the growth of feeling in the country in favour of the movement advocated by the league; and alluding to the presence at the meeting of foreigners, said that the league were convinced that that which was for the good of this country was for the good of other countries also. At the Royal Commission on Depression of Trade the subject was debated, but they recommended another Commission, which was now sitting, and before which he had been under examination for six days. What had to be done was to bring about an international agreement on the subject. The bimetallic law was that the nations adopting it should open their mints for the free coinage of gold and silver, as was the law in England before 1816; that they should settle by law the ratio at which the coinage should be done, and whether it was 15½ or 20½ to one, or whether it was the ratio fixed by the par of exchange; and that the coin so coined should be legal tender in all payments at the option of the payer.

Mr. Frank Hardcastle seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., moved the second resolution:—"That the existence of two monetary standards or measures of value within the British Empire is prejudicial to trade, and that it is desirable to establish the one bimetallic standard." The hon. gentleman observed that the inconveniences arising from our having two standards in different parts of the Empire were scarcely felt before the year 1873. They could not repeat too often that owing to the action of France, which previously undertook to exchange the two metals for the benefit of the whole world, this country, its colonies, and dependencies had had, to all intents and purposes, the benefit of a full bimetallic system, whereas our trade now with silver-using countries had become a trade of barter. He contended that the low and falling prices were a severe aggravation of the fixed burdens of the country. The fact was that all over the country the mortgagee was becoming the real owner of the property.

Mr. Samuel Montagu, M.P., in seconding the motion, spoke of the commercial aspect of the question. Every country, he said, was interested in silver, and therefore every country must be interested in arresting its decline, and, most of all, England, not only from her interest in her Eastern subjects, but also on account of the millions which we had invested in India and the East.

Mr. A. Haworth (Manchester), in supporting the resolution, assured the meeting, speaking as a Lancashire man, that the condition of things in Lancashire was very serious indeed. By having two standards within the limits of our Empire we thereby gave a bonus of a preferential payment in favour of that portion of our Empire which was silver-using, and which, in common with us, could trade with silver-using countries. The cotton spinner in Bombay and the cotton spinner in Lancashire who sent their cotton to a neutral market like China both received silver in exchange, but the Bombay cotton spinner tendered all the cost of production in the medium which he received for his cotton goods, whereas the Lancashire spinner had to submit to an enormous loss in exchange. Hence his competitor in Bombay had an immense advantage over the Lancashire spinner, and they would understand from a few figures he would quote how it was that Lancashire was in such a state of suffering at the present time. In 1876 the export of English cotton yarns to the Eastern markets—to China and Japan—amounted to 30 million pounds weight. In 1886 they had shrunk to 26 million pounds weight. Thus in ten years, while the exports from England diminished by four million pounds weight, the exports from India increased 92,000,000lb. weight. The full significance of this fact for Lancashire they could readily understand, and the evil was continuing. Lancashire was taking hold of this currency question, and there was reason why she should. (Applause.)

The resolution was adopted nem. con.

On the motion of Mr. R. H. Grenfell, it was decided to send copies of the resolutions already passed to the Prime Minister, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the chairman of the Currency Commission.

The members of the League dined together in the evening at the Criterion—the president (Mr. Henry H. Gibbs) in the chair. The company included Mr. Robert Barclay, Mr. J. H. Gwyther, Mr. P. F. Tidman, Mr. A. W. Byron and Mr. Henry McNeil (vice-chairman), Lord Aveland, Colonel Bridgeman, M.P., Sir C. Forbes, Sir Hector Hay, Mr. S. Dana Horton (New York), Mr. Frank Hardcastle, M.P., and Messrs. W. H. Yang and Fung Yee (Chinese Legation).

The loyal and patriotic toasts were duly honoured. Colonel the Hon. F. C. Bridgeman, M.P., in responding for the army, navy, and auxiliary forces said:—It was generally admitted that gold would continue to appreciate and that silver would continue to depreciate. In Lancashire they were deeply interested in—for instance—the cotton trade with China, and they thought that the time might come—was not, indeed, far distant—when China would realise that it would answer her purpose better to get her cotton from India rather than England, and thus avoid the enormous premium they had to pay upon gold.

The Chairman, amid cheers, proposed the toast of the evening, "Success to the Bi-metallic League." He said they had other nations represented that evening besides the English. This was the beginning of a Bi-metallic Convention. (Hear, hear.) America, India, China, and Japan were represented, and if their French and German friends had only known of that meeting there would have been another table full. What the League wanted was to disseminate easy and cheap literature over the country, and to carry on their propaganda as the Anti-Corn Law League carried on theirs. The other toasts were "The Guests," proposed by Mr. H. R. Grenfell, M.P., and acknowledged by Mr. S. Dana Horton; and "The Chairman," given by Mr. R. Barclay.

THE Pioneer states that the engineer officers employed in preparing estimates for doubling certain sections of the Rajputana-Malwa Railway and for converting them to broad gauge have now been at work some time; and their report may be expected next month.

THE quarrel between the Bengal Government and the Calcutta High Court has been satisfactorily adjusted. It will be remembered that the Bengal Government passed a resolution criticising in rather severe terms some of the judgments of the High Court. The Government has, it is understood, fully recognised the right of the High Court to protest against the criticism passed by the Lieutenant-Governor on its judicial acts and those of its subordinates—a criticism which was more apparent perhaps than real—but at the same time it as fully accepts the reply of the Lieutenant-Governor, who repudiated any intention of criticism on those lines, showing that his remarks were primarily directed to matters connected with the executive functions of his own officers, on whom he had clearly a right to pronounce an opinion. There, we understand, the matter ends.

THE INDIAN POLICE.—If the Indian police is bad, it is not due to any intrinsic defect of the men who compose it. The Indian police is so bad, because of the spirit of despotism which pervades the British administration in India. The police is immediately under the executive heads of the districts, who are generally so many little autocrats in their way. One of their important duties is to send people to jail, and the more people a Magistrate can send to jail the more he is praised by Government, and has a chance of promotion. The police as immediate subordinates consider themselves as in duty bound to arrest as many people as they can conveniently do, and no wonder that in their zeal to please their masters they should frequently extort confessions and fabricate cases. The fact is, the whole criminal administration of the country is rotten to the core. The chief functions of the police here, as we said, are to hunt up cases and see the criminals punished, and to exist and flourish, it must be continually moving to augment the number of its prey. It thus sends up a large number of innocent men along with the guilty for trial. The Magistrate is much disappointed to find that he cannot send the whole gang to jail, and he consoles himself by sending the majority. And the Government rewards those who are over-zealous in their work, and stops the promotion of those who acquit a large number of the accused.—Amrita Bazaar Patrika.

ÆOLUS WATERSPRAY GENERAL VENTILATING AND ELECTRICAL ENGINEERING COMPANY'S SYSTEMS OF HEATING, COOLING, VENTILATING, AND ELECTRIC LIGHTING ARE THE CHEAPEST AND BEST.

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
February 19, 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed)

R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

From LAMB and ARMSTRONG:—

38, Grainger Street, West, Newcastle-on-Tyne
May 25, 1887.

Re St. Peter's Church, Jarrow-on-Tyne.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully,

(Signed)

LAMB AND ARMSTRONG, Architects.

To the Secretary of the Æolus Waterspray Company.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

IS
SPECIFIC
CHOLERA.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. — We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

COUGH, COLD,
ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. — Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This is necessary, as many persons have purchased by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. — Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHŒA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA." From Symes & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhœa and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, SSGT. Russell St., W.C.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE PALLIATIVE IN

NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, Hysteria. IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. Is. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER. J. T. DAVENPORT, SSGT. Russell St., W.C.

DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

The reputation of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS, originally introduced into England by the SOLE AGENTS, Messrs. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established, and the success of their enterprise has surpassed their expectations. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS afford the only instance hitherto attained of the perfect representation of real Diamonds by artificial means. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real Diamonds of great value at the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grand monde and elite of society, and are now worn at the Court Balls and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly Diamond Ornaments, and can be worn at all times with confidence and security.

Every article is Mounted in 18-Carat Gold by the best Diamond Setters, exactly in the manner of the finest Brazilian Diamonds.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed to raise the necessary working capital for developing a group of mines, which have been acquired from the Whitehead Mining and Smelting Company Limited. This group of mines is situated in Mount Sneffles, Ouray County, Colorado, U.S.A., and consists of the GOVERNOR, a rich gold-bearing property, containing over ten acres, which is intersected by the CHARLES PHILLIPS, a silver-bearing lode, containing nearly eight acres, and the BLUE BIRD, a silver-bearing lode, containing over eight acres.

Each lode is a full claim of 1,500 feet in length and 300 feet in width, and covering surface ground to the extent of over twenty-six acres.

The mines are well opened up, and the nature of the ore and character of the veins may be seen from the accompanying engineers' reports.

The quartz samples have been submitted to the inspection of eminent experts in London, who have expressed themselves most favourably regarding them.

The entire district in which these mines are situated is exceedingly rich in minerals, three immense veins, containing numerous lodes, having been successfully worked by different companies, prominently amongst these being the celebrated Virginus, which has six locations within sight of the Blue Bird; the Terrible, an immense body of ore with four locations; the Smuggler, containing twelve locations; the Sheridan, which has not long ago been sold for 250,000 dols., and several others, all of which are of great promise and value.

It is worthy of note that Colorado is now the richest mineral country in the United States, having outrivalled California.

The titles to the group are secured by United States Patents, issued by the Government at their land office, Lake City, and dated 10th March and 9th April of the year 1883, and numbered 1286, 1287, and 1288.

The mines are within one mile of a county road, and the railway will shortly be opened to within a short distance, so that ready access can at all times be depended upon. The telegraph wires pass within one mile and a half, and a branch can be easily and cheaply attached, which will, when desired, place the mines in direct communication with the Board of Directors.

Taking the average of the five medium assays as a fair and reasonable valuation of the mineral, viz., £15 14s. per ton—see report—and the cost of obtaining it, including all expenses for delivering at smelters' works, at £9 3s. 4d. per ton, a profit is realised of £6 10s. 8d. per ton.

In their report on the property the eminent mining engineers, Messrs. Bainbridge, Seymour, and Rathbone, write:—"We are of opinion that the property is well worthy the attention of capitalists, so long as it is managed economically under proper and experienced management. The property has several defined veins upon it. We understand that you are desirous that we should undertake the practical control of operations, which we are willing to do on the conditions that we be at liberty to select the mining captain on the ground, and to advise the proposed Company as to the necessary expenditure, and generally to direct the mining operations. We should recommend that only a relatively small amount should be disbursed in the first instance, and that so soon as satisfactory results accrue from this expenditure, a large sum of money should be devoted to the development of the property. Speaking approximately, we should advise you to secure a working capital of from £10,000 to £15,000."

Having the utmost confidence in this report, the directors have much pleasure in announcing that they have secured the services of these gentlemen as consulting engineers, and will be entirely advised by them as to the amount of working capital to be spent, and the manner in which it is to be spent. No further calls will, therefore, be made, except when the engineers advise that an increased expenditure on the mine will be likely to lead to favourable results.

The purchase-money has been fixed at £55,000, payable as to £33,333 in fully-paid shares, and £21,667 in cash.

The Whitehead Mining and Smelting Company, Limited, who are the promoters of the Company, have expressed their willingness to take the whole of their share of the purchase-money in shares; but, in order to comply with the rules of the Stock Exchange, the directors have stipulated to have the right to make such payments part in cash and part in shares.

The only agreement entered into affecting the Company is one dated the 20th day of April, 1887, and made between the Whitehead Mining and Smelting Company, Limited, of the one part, and William Simpson Miln, as trustee for and on behalf of the Company, of the other part.

The vendor Company pay all the expenses of the issue up to the first allotment of shares, except usual brokerages; and only in case total payment in shares is made to them, as purchase price, will a limited amount of out-of-pocket expenses be refunded to them by the Company.

The memorandum of association, full engineers' reports, and copy of agreement, may be inspected at the offices of the solicitors to the Company.

Applications should be made on the form enclosed with the prospectus, and sent with cheque to the bankers, or to the secretary, where prospectuses may be obtained.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1887.

General Intelligence.

[BY OVERLAND MAIL.]

THE Overland Mail brings us letters and advices from Bombay to the 7th June; from Allahabad and Madras to the 5th June; and from Calcutta to the 4th June.

No news of any moment of the Ghilzai rebellion has been received in India since the junction of the Amir's two forces at Maruf. The Ghilzais gave May 15th as the day when they would make a grand effort, but nothing seems to have occurred then either about Ghazni or further south.

THE health of the Amir has so much improved that he has gone to his country-seat in the Chandeh Valley for change of air.

A DETACHMENT of the 17th Bombay Infantry has occupied Chaman, on the Afghan Frontier.

ALL is reported to be quiet towards Candahar, and the Natives are to be friendly disposed towards the British.

NUR MAHOMED KHAN, son of Wali Mahomed, who failed to enlist the sympathies of the Shinwaris lately against the Amir, is now reported to have gone towards Khost with 100 or 200 followers. He is evidently bent on raising a rebellion in the neighbourhood of Kurram.

THE question of the route to be taken by the railway across the Khwaja-Amran range will probably be settled very shortly, as though the final survey reports have not yet been received the Government is now in possession of sufficient material to arrive at a conclusion.

REPORTS from the northern frontier of Persia show that the Russians are running a branch railway from the Merv-Askabad line southwards in the direction of the Herat province, while at the same time they are linking their outposts towards Panjdeh with Merv by telegraph.

THE Tounghoo-Mandalay Railway has made good progress so far, and it is hoped that the surface line will be completed by June next year.

It is intended to organise the military police of Lower Burma on the same principle as that working so successfully in the upper province. The police regulation will be applied to them accordingly.

THE services of Mr. Daly, Officiating Inspector-General of Police in Upper Burma, have been replaced at the disposal of the Government of Bengal, consequent on Colonel Stedman's appointment. It is probable that the whole military police in Upper and Lower Burma will come under the charge of Colonel Stedman, who will receive brigade rank.

MR. WYNNE, Agent and Engineer-in-Chief of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, visits Simla shortly to confer with the Government regarding the working plans of the line. It is not likely that any material change will be made of the alignment settled by the Government surveys, but the actual point of junction with the East Indian Railway has still got to be fixed.

THE Oudh and Rohilkhand Railway Bridge over the Ganges at Benares will be formally opened—probably by his Excellency the Viceroy, on the 9th of November.

THE employes of the East Indian Railway, who struck at Jamalpur, have been fined various sums, from fifty rupees downwards, for leaving work without giving the customary fifteen days' notice.

MAJOR MARTELLI, Political Agent at Bhurtpore and Kerowlie, is now on a short visit to Simla, having reference to matters connected with the Dholpore State, the embarrassments of which are unfortunately notorious. Action will probably be taken to ensure some decided improvement at an early date.

It is considered to be improbable that any radical change will be made in the Calcutta High Court in opposition to the views of the Court; but a revision of the strength of the Bench is likely to be the outcome of the interchange of views between the Court and Government.

MR. JUSTICE STRAIGHT will take his leave to England, and Mr. C. H. Hill will officiate accordingly as a Judge of the Allahabad High Court, as was arranged in the first instance.

THE weather in the Assam tea districts was, during the last week, generally favourable, the only exception being at Hazaribagh, where rain was much wanted. The cyclone, however, seems to have provided for this deficiency, as some inches of rain are reported to have fallen there at the end of the week.

MR. QUINTON will introduce the Allahabad University Bill at the next meeting of the Legislative Council of the North-West Provinces on the 8th inst.

As regards the proceedings of the Select Committee on the Punjab Land Bills, it seems likely that little or no difficulty will be felt in the matter of principles, but much laborious work still remains over details.

THE Native Passenger Ships' Act, 1887, has been enforced from June 1.

THE health of Mr. A. R. Colquhoun has suffered so much from the hard work he has had since he went to Burma that he is returning to England for a period to recruit.

THE net Indian sea and land customs revenue, exclusive of the salt revenue, for the first month of the current financial year, amounted to Rs. 14,70,000, as compared with Rs. 12,76,000 during the corresponding period of last year.

THE petition to the Bombay Government against the appointment of a Civilian to the acting First Presidency Magistrate, was sent in recently. It is signed by about two thousand people, representing various sections of the Bombay community, European and Native.

ANGLO-INDIAN parents and guardians will be glad to learn that an agricultural collegiate school has been opened at East Grinstead to prepare boys to occupy the positions of land-owners and occupiers, land agents, surveyors, intending colonists, &c. The course of education is thoroughly sound and practical, and there is a large farm attached. The establishment is just what is required for those who purpose emigrating. Instead of arriving in New Zealand, Australia, and elsewhere in a state of perfect ignorance, as has hitherto been the case, we shall have sent out from the Agricultural Collegiate School a number of young men thoroughly acquainted with farming and agriculture generally, and able at once to earn their living. We notice the terms are very moderate.

THE RUSSIANS ON THE OXUS.—In connection with the recent occupation of Kerki by a Russian force the following letter to the Russian Official Messenger will be of interest to our readers. It is dated Charjui, May 16:—"About five months have elapsed since the opening of the railway station at Charjui and the arrival here of the 3rd Turkestan Rifle Battalion. From that day the life of the place has entered on a new phase, and the condition of the inhabitants has undergone a complete change. Five miles from Charjui and close to the river a small Russian colony has established itself near the Cantonment of our troops, and there are already twenty-four shops in the bazaar. There are already a Russian bakery and a Russian church. The relations between Russians and Natives are most cordial. The Bek of the place has been most energetic in our behalf, and in return we have lost no opportunity of being of use to him. On the 12th inst. (April 30th, O.S.) the 17th Turkestan Battalion and the 4th battery of the local brigade left Charjui for Kerki, and at the same time a sotnia of the Astrakhan Cossacks arrived here by train." The value of this letter is in showing that the occupation of Kerki was decided upon one week earlier than has yet been publicly admitted.

Notes of the Week.

THERE is very little news to record from India by the present mail. Reuter's telegrams on Afghanistan affairs having gone back to India are being commented upon, much in the same way in which we commented upon them when they were wired to this country. The best informed of the Anglo-Indian newspapers characterises Reuter's news as "marvellous and unfounded."

FOR, says the same paper, "his matter-of-fact announcement that English engineers are fortifying Herat so as to render it capable of standing a siege looks as though his agent had got hold of some papers of two years ago, when our Commission was in Afghanistan, and had mistaken them as having reference to the present. Perhaps he has been merely hoodwinked for a purpose. At any rate, in point of fact there is no British engineer officer nearer to Herat than Colonel Sir Oliver St. John at Quetta."

THE telegrams which the Calcutta correspondent of the Times continues to send to that journal every Sunday are, however, not much better in the way of authenticity than those of Reuter. Under date of June 26 we are told that the Ghilzai rebellion "appears to be entering an acuter phase," whatever that may mean. Some fruit trees and almond orchards belonging to the Hotaks have been cut down by order of the Ameer, and "this stern policy" appears likely, so we are informed, "to recoil upon the Ameer's own head."

THIS the correspondent considers trustworthy information. What he considers as "more or less untrustworthy" is that the Ameer's troops in Ghazni are in arrears of pay and discontented. To the most youthful and credulous sojourner in the East such information ought to have been accepted as trustworthy indeed. Punctual payment of soldiers' salaries was never a weakness with Oriental despots, and it is strange why the Times correspondent should doubt the report that the Ameer of Afghanistan is a little like his predecessors in this respect.

It is, says the Pioneer, a curious sign of the times that more than one vernacular paper in Upper India is actually urging the Government to make a forward movement from Peshin in answer to the encroachments of Russia on the Oxus and Hari Rud. "Better annex Afghanistan and have done with it," is the advice one Native journalist offers, and another, while urging abstention from interference in the civil war now flickering in Eastern Afghanistan, counsels that every preparation be made for the occupation of Kandahar with a view to checkmating the Russians. From this our contemporary argues that a forward movement from the Khojak is becoming familiar in India. It is not, however, likely that such a movement will be made until Russia shows her hand a little more openly. At present the policy of the Indian Government is to watch and wait.

THE news has been telegraphed to India that the Maharaja Dhulip Sing has asked permission of the Russian authorities to be allowed to proceed through Central Asia to the Afghan frontier. At this information the Indian Press is "laughing consumedly." One journal says: "If Dhulip Sing wishes to have his throat cut in a very summary fashion, he will proceed through Central Asia to the Afghan frontier immediately."

WE think so too, and quite endorse what the same paper says in connection with this extraordinary intelligence: "We should like to learn at what point of the Afghan frontier the 'Sikh Chieftain,' as the English papers delight to call him, intends to appear, and upon whom he intends to exercise his influence. Of all the races in Asia the Sikhs and Afghans are those which are never likely to coalesce, the bitterest hatred existing between them, founded on the fierce conflicts in the Peshawur valley." This was proved when the Sikhs, fighting on our side, met their old enemies in battle during the late Afghan campaigns. Dhulip Sing had better remain in Moscow or return to England rather than tempt the Afghan frontier gentlemen.

WHEN Sir Boyle Roche, according to the traditional story, complained in the House of Commons that "posterity had done nothing for the present generation" it is said that he was laughed at, but why? The erudite and exact Pioneer just to hand says in an article on the Simla exodus question, "Lord Lawrence in determining not to spend the summer in Bengal only followed the practice of his successors." Risum teneatis amici!

WE were under the impression that the Simla exodus question had been finally settled, but the Allahabad paper of the 5th instant devotes several columns to its discussion. The arguments supported are, of course, those which favour Simla. If there was balm in Gilead—and it was only put as a query—there is certainly, according to the Pioneer, no virtue in Calcutta. It is a hot-bed and a charnel-house, and dangerous to the lives of members of Council. For, says the Pioneer, quoting Sir Henry Maine, "the most foolish form of prodigality of which a Government can be guilty is to unnecessarily expend the health and nerves of its servants." After this, what need of further argument in favour of Simla?

ALTHOUGH India held her celebrations of Her Majesty's Jubilee some months ago, when the weather permitted of festivities in the open-air, she was not forgetful of the day on Tuesday last. It was a general holiday throughout the country in honour of Her Gracious Majesty—the Kaiser-i-Hind. And on Friday last, that day being the Mahomedan festival of the Bairam, special prayers for the health of Queen Victoria were said in every mosque in India. Russian papers please copy.

THE annual dinner of gentlemen connected with the Straits Settlements took place at the Criterion, on the 14th inst., Mr. W. Paterson presiding. The reunion was of a most felicitous nature, and brought many together who have communities of interest in the Straits Settlements, and the neighbouring peninsula. The dinner has now taken place for some years, and it is to be hoped that the institution of it will not be allowed to die out. There are many who do not get drawn together except by such meetings, and the good they do in furthering the interests represented, is more than the memories which are carried away of the post-prandial orations. The guests were:—

Lieut.-General Sir Andrew Clarke, G.C.M.G., General Man, General Sir Orfeur Cavanagh, K.C.S.I., Admiral the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel, G.C.B., Sir Cecil Clementi Smith, K.C.M.G. The company present were:—Dr. T. Irvine Rowell, Major McCallum, C.M.G., Messrs. J. Anderson, J. Greig, Wm. Geo. Greig, J. Little, M. Little, S. Gilfillan, H. W. Wood, W. Adamson, Jasper Young, C. Morris, J. Weir, J. Stow Young, J. Henderson, J. H. Gwyther, J. Fraser, Thos. Lee Mullins, H. Buchanan, W. R. Scott, J. Brussel, J. Buttery, Geo. Mansfield, C. Stringer, L. V. Helms, E. J. Leveson, James Guthrie, P. Carpenter, F. H. Gottlieb, J. R. Paton, T. C. Bogaardt, W. Garland, J. Campbell Ker, Ernest Satow, C.M.G., Paul F. Tidman, C.M.G., and W. Mactaggart.

The official list of toasts was as follows:—"The Queen," "The Royal Family," "The Services," proposed by the Chairman, replied to by Admiral the Hon. Sir Henry Keppel, G.C.B. "The Straits Settlements," proposed by Lieut.-General Sir Andrew Clarke, G.C.M.G., replied to by J. Young, Esq. "The Guests," proposed by S. Gilfillan, Esq., replied to by Sir Cecil Clementi Smith, K.C.M.G. "The Chairman," proposed by General Sir Orfeur Cavanagh, K.C.S.I. To these toasts of the health of Mr. Tidman, C.M.G., and Major McCallum, C.M.G., were also added.

Owing to pressure on our space to-day we are obliged to keep back a quantity of matter, correspondence, and reviews, &c.

ACCORDING to the Englishman no successor appears as yet to have been appointed to Sir A. Colvin. The subject is under consideration, and a confidential communication has been received about it by the Government of India from the Secretary of State, but information has not been yet received that the matter has been finally settled. The appointment, of course, rests with the Secretary of State.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

INDIA.

CALCUTTA, JUNE 26.

Although the Queen's Jubilee was celebrated in this country in February, and the season is now unfavourable for public ceremonies, last Tuesday was not allowed to pass unnoticed. The day was observed as a general holiday, all business being suspended. A salute of fifty guns was fired at daybreak in the Presidency towns and the large military stations. A special Gazette announced the grant of an amnesty to particular classes of military offenders in the British and Native armies, and a number of military prisoners were released. The same Gazette announced that as a token of appreciation of the services of Native officers the Queen had been pleased to sanction an increase of fifty appointments to the second-class of the Order of British India.

The Governor of Madras came specially from Ootacamund to the capital to unveil a statue of the Queen, presented to the city by Rajah Gujapati Rao. The ceremony was witnessed by a great crowd. The Governor delivered a speech in which he dwelt upon Her Majesty's ever present sympathy and enormous beneficent personal influence. He took advantage of the opportunity to say that he had authority to state that the Government did not consider the events taking place on the North-Western frontier unfavourable to the maintenance of peace, that no changes were being made in the military arrangements, and that he perceived no indication of a disturbance of the public peace. The city of Madras was illuminated in the evening.

The Governor of Bombay, speaking at a Jubilee banquet at Poonah, claimed for the Victorian era greater progress in arts and sciences than had been recorded in any other period of English history. It was round the throne, he said, that the Australians, Canadians, Indians, and South Africans ought to gather and amalgamate. He believed that in future society would find in the Sovereign its natural head and guide, that London would become the virtual metropolis of all English-speaking communities, and that the University of London must become the great centre of the intellectual activity of the Anglo-Saxon race.

At Mysore the Maharajah laid the foundation-stone of the Victoria Jubilee Institute, and immediately afterwards telegraphed his congratulations to the Queen.

At Simla the Commander-in-Chief gave a grand ball, one feature of which was the presence of two men from every regiment which had served under General Roberts in Afghanistan. Various other minor festivities have been held throughout the country.

The Indian Government has been considering the advisability of legislating with reference to the questions raised by Rukhmabai's case. From the correspondence now published it appears that the Bombay Government last March suggested that the law on the subject of the execution of decrees for the restitution of conjugal rights should be amended, and should follow the course of English legislation by exempting from imprisonment the person against whom the decree was made. The Supreme Government has forwarded this letter to the other provincial administrations for their opinion, with a covering letter, in which, after explaining the English law on the subject, it suggests that non-compliance with a decree should be made the ground for dissolving the marriage upon the application of either party, provided compensation be given to the party divorced and suitable provision made for children.

A resolution published in yesterday's Gazette conveys the hearty congratulations of the Government to General Browne and his staff on the satisfactory completion of the Scinde-Pishin Railway. In recognition of their services a bonus of one month's pay is granted to those who served over six months, of two months' pay to those who served over 18 months, and of three months' pay to those who served over 30 months. Special leave on full pay may be taken in lieu of the bonus.

BURMA.

RANGOON, JUNE 26.

During the past week several successful attacks on dacoits have been made by the 4th Brigade, under General Low, and many prisoners have been captured. The camp at Boh-Cho, who is one of the most dangerous dacoit chiefs, and who last year had a following of 1,300 armed men, was surprised by Lieutenant Hawkes with some mounted infantry from Myingyan. Boh Cho, whose force is reduced to sixty men, escaped with difficulty; five of his men were killed and several were wounded, some arms being also captured.

In the Shwabo district the 2nd Hyderabad Cavalry contingent had a very successful encounter near Natatin with a body of dacoits led by Bohngi, the well-known dacoit chief. Bohngi and nine others were killed, and eleven prisoners with a large quantity of arms were captured. The Jemadar who commanded the Lancers behaved with great gallantry, and was severely wounded, as was also one trooper.

In the Pyinmana district Colonel Sartorius and his fine regiment, the first Beloochees, have rendered valuable services in dispersing and driving out of the district numerous bands of dacoits which infested it. These bands, which last year numbered hundreds, are now reduced to petty gangs, lurking in the densest jungle. Badazaza, who although scarcely twenty-one, is among the best known dacoit leaders, is still at large in this district. Two Bheel trackers have arrived from India, and next week a trial will be made of their skill in pursuing Badazaza. If they prove successful a number of other trackers will be brought from India.

The 18th Bengal Infantry, now stationed in the Chindwin Valley, will return to India immediately. This is the beginning of a large withdrawal of troops from Upper Burma.

ANGLO-INDIAN PRESS.

IN THE YEAR '57.—I.
(Civil and Military Gazette.)

The file was nearly a foot thick, and as fresh in appearance as if it had just been put in the record-room.

"All that is worth keeping of the Mutiny papers," said the Babu. "Proceedings of the Government of the Punjab—July, '57—selected." There was obviously no sentiment about the Babu. As he slapped the file down on the table, there showed, on the rim of a fat white docket, the initials "J. L." Nothing written by John Lawrence's strong hand should ever fade, and it seemed quite natural, therefore, that the rugged characters should be black and fresh as ever. The ink he used must have been better than the ink-powders of a degenerate to-day. As much of the inscription as was visible attested that "J. L." approved of something in July, 1857. Nay, he found it "highly expedient," and wrote as much to a "Colonel Sydney C."—the tape hid the rest.

The file opened slowly and fell apart into more than a hundred and fifty letters—blue, white, and yellow—stacked in any order, and all bearing date of the month of July. It was impossible to observe method in dealing with the mass. One was forced to dip as into a lucky bag.

But here we must think. "J. L." wrote illegibly, but he had his hands full just then. Indeed, since the 10th of May, when certain lamentable news flashed up from Meerut, he had been forced to forego his sick-leave to Murree, and to fly back to headquarters, there to see what could be done to save the Province. Two days after receipt of that telegram in Lahore, "J. L." being somewhere the wrong side of Pindi, one Robert Montgomery, Judicial Commissioner, drove out along the Mian Mir road to take counsel with Brigadier-General Corbett; and between the two of them, when the ball on the night of the 12th had been danced out, they disarmed four Native regiments, and set a guard on Lahore Fort.

"J. L." came back as fast as he could after talking to a Lieutenant-Colonel Herbert Edwardes at Pindi; and found that "R. M."—a very scratchy scrawly "R. M." it was—had kept the city quiet. What "J. L." said to "R. M." is not on the file. He must have thanked him, but the file only deals with July—that is to say after Nicholson had driven the 55th regiment of Native Infantry from Nowshera to Murdan, and from Murdan to the hills of Swat, where nature and man turned against and slew them—after the mutiny had broken out at Jullundur, Ludhiana, and elsewhere, and after the mutineers held possession of Delhi. So we come upon "J. L." in the thick of his office work, as it were not knowing that he was making history, but only grimly certain that the "prevalent mania," as one of his subordinates quaintly calls it, must be cured.

Take a docket marked with the rough hard hand-writing—all the a's like e's—and see what "J. L." is doing early in July. "Money being already scarce in the Punjab, it is necessary"—let the Paymasters of the Lahore, Pindi, and Jullundur circles look to it—"that expenditure be watched and restricted as far as possible. Unless this be done we shall probably find ourselves entirely without funds."

Wherefore, all Native regiments are gradually to be brought into arrears of pay for three months, and no advances are to be made. But pay the Goorkhas and the Punjab Irregular Force for a time. "J. L." dates his dockets very carelessly; but, as he is saving a Province, he may perhaps be forgiven. No wonder he wishes to economise. Here is Sydney Cotton in Peshawur—he signs himself with the clearness of a writing-master—recommending the storage of fifteen days' provisions for European troops in Peshawur fort—as per memo appended, and going into the homeliest bazar details—at a cost of thirteen thousand rupees; and all the Districts are indenting on Lahore for help of some kind. Now it is written, in the history of the Mutiny that, on the 24th of July, "J. L." who had been arguing with Edwardes and Cotton against the retention of Peshawur, wrote to the Governor-General of India saying:—"The Punjab will prove short work to the Mutineers when the Delhi army is destroyed." It was the retention of Delhi not Peshawur, we are told, that "J. L." set his heart on, in spite of Edwardes's pleading.

Yet, on the 27th of July—three days after he had sent his letter to the Governor-General—"J. L." scrawls on the back of Cotton's demand—"Sanctioned, and say that I consider the measure highly expedient, and further I suggest"—here the outlines of an arrangement to be made with the bunnias in the Sudder Bazaar, and after a blot—"purchase sufficient for at least two months' supplies, and store it in the Fort." So wrote "J. L." with a vile pen. Had he changed his mind as to the retention of Peshawur in three days? It does not matter now; for the grain and the sago and the lime-juice were not needed, and Sydney Cotton's fears that the supplies would be cut off were groundless.

What a hopeless muddle it all is—this long ridge of papers that show, without the gloss of print, the very bed-rock and base of the storm-tossed administration.

The dockets crack dolefully as they are spread out. What comes next at hazard? Indents for forage and ammunition, and yet more ammunition. Lieutenant Medley—J. G. Medley, of the Royal Engineers—employed on Canal works by the Indus, has paid so much in advances to Bhagat and Bhaggoo, two of his Sepoys. Lieutenant J. G. Medley has to explain his reasons in writing. One would feel sorry for him, if one did not know that two months hence—in September—he will drop canal work, come down to Delhi, and be all but blown up in a professional attempt to see how big is the breach in the Water Bastion. Then an honoured career will be his, and, in the end, his sons in the Army to bear his name honourably. But now he has certainly made a mistake in those advances to Bhagat and Bhaggoo. Perhaps he should have brought them "gradually into arrears of pay."

Meantime a single sheet has fluttered out of the letter and on the floor. The Mutiny men have no notion of filing, or are their successors at fault?

The single sheet deals with levies. So many levies of loyal men, that "J. L." seems confused. Colonel Macpherson proposes to appoint more officers to the Ludhianah and Ferozepore levies. What levies are these? "J. L." He grows ungrammatical. "Captain Nicholson and two other officers nominated by Major Lake, was to raise and manage the Ludhianah regiment. That at Ferozepore was to be raised by Marsden. He has got Lieutenant Currie to help him, but probably Marsden has not time for this. Inquire if this be the case, and if so, arrange for a Commandant and a Second in Command; Currie being Adjutant. I would not have more officers. They would only do harm. Let the battalion be 10 companies of 80 men. Native officers as in the Punjab Force. 10 companies, viz., 4 Sikhs; 2—on second thoughts, 4—Mahomedans; and 2 Hill men. Kangra Hill, not Golab Singh's." Then up one side of the page:—"Keep room in it for the men now fighting so bravely with Van Cortlandt." Then, diagonally and blotted in haste, to some one in the back-ground:—"See how many new corps this will make."

Van Cortlandt is out and away to the north-west of Delhi, teaching men what a thing it is to rebel against the British Government. He has been at this work since May, and will be at it till September; but on the 24th of July "J. L." thinks kindly of Van Cortlandt.

Curious that "J. L." should hesitate about sending more officers to Ludhianah. They are rather in need of them. Six weeks ago, Ricketts, the Deputy Commissioner there, used up all the ammunition of "one small gun" at the Ludhianah ferry when the Jullundur mutineers swept by on their way to Delhi. He could not do more, even with the 4th Sikhs to help him. He could not stay the sack of the Ludhianah Cantonments, when Johnstone of Jullundur refused to send help. But Ricketts is a hard man, and has been hunting Mutineers across the Doab. He, like everyone else, wants troops and officers.

AFGHANISTAN.—II.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Herat and the provinces of Afghanistan, north of Hazaristan and the Hindu Kush, must be abandoned to their fate when the Afghan kingdom falls to pieces. They will be seized by rivals of Amir Abdul Rahman Khan, or of his successor, under Russian auspices. We cannot prevent this, and, in a military point of view, there is no sufficient reason why we should attempt it, even were we equal to the effort. As regards military considerations, such an event need not be regretted. Far otherwise is the case, however, from a political point of view. We have so emphatically announced our determination to brook no Russian encroachment upon the dominions of the existing Afghan kingdom; we have so loudly proclaimed our view that Herat is the Key of India, and that the possession of the provinces north of Hazaristan by a ruler in alliance with ourselves is indispensable to our security; that to abandon these now to rulers who will be subordinate to Russia must be regarded in India, and throughout Asia, as a serious defeat to ourselves, and must thus strengthen the impression of Russia's irresistible power.

Such being the case, it only remains to take up a new position which we can maintain, in place of the one which we are compelled to abandon. Accepting the fact that we cannot prevent Herat and the ultra-montane provinces from coming under Russian influences, let us be thankful that, from a military point of view, this event is not very material, and let us do the utmost we can to minimize the effect of the political defeat by making it clear that our military position is stronger than ever. To this end it is necessary that Afghanistan proper, viz., Kabul with its appanages on the east, and Kandahar on the west, should be made perfectly secure. There we can defend, and our ability and readiness to do this should be rendered very evident.

Both must occupy the position with relation to ourselves and our neighbour, that the protected Sikh States east of the Sutlej occupied during the period 1810-1845.

As regards Eastern Afghanistan, all we need is that its ruler should be in subordinate alliance with ourselves, and his country open and accessible at all times to our forces in the event of their advance being necessary for its defence. To this end all that is at present necessary are good roads, to be constructed and maintained with subsidies from ourselves, and under inspection of our officers. But in Western Afghanistan much more is requisite. The railway must be carried on to Kandahar, and a strong British garrison there must cover both that route to British India, and also the road up the Tirnuk river to Ghuzni and Kabul. When Herat, and the districts called collectively Afghan-Turkestan becomes, in fact, Russian provinces, there is no possible escape from the necessity of holding Kandahar on the west, and of securing easy access to the issues of the Hindu Kush on the east. These are the Panjsher, Perwan and Ghorband routes, leading into the Kohistan of Kabul, and the great route between Khulair and Kabul via Bamian. Of these only the last-named is in the least likely to be used by a European army, though all are traversed by horsemen and laden camels, and can be rendered passable for artillery. Even the Bamian route presents serious difficulties, and no force could successfully debouch from it if opposed in strength. With good communications running from Kohat and Peshawar to Kabul we could with certainty anticipate any movement by these Passes, and render their use by an enemy's army impossible. Thus it only remains to consider the best method of rendering ourselves secure on the side of Kandahar.

In 1880 the Native army recorded an effectual protest against service in Afghanistan by failing to recruit its strength. Doubtless when a railway is open to Kandahar, the objection to garrison service there will not be so strong, as furlough will be easily available; nevertheless the climate and surroundings must always render such service distasteful to the people of the Punjab and Hindustan; and it will be desirable, for this reason among others, to raise a local force for service in Kandahar, as was done on the annexation of the Punjab for service on the Trans-Indus frontier. Excellent material for such a force exists on the spot in the Hazarehs, poor and hardy mountaineers intensely hostile to the Afghans by whom they have long been oppressed; also in the Biloch, or rather Nahro tribes south of the Helmund. It must be remembered that, for the security of the province of Kandahar, it will not suffice to garrison Kandahar only. On the contrary, it will behove us to neutralise, as far as possible, the advantage accruing to Russia in the possession of Herat. For it cannot be disputed that, in acquiring Herat, Russia will gain a most important and material advantage, besides the political triumph. Herat may not be of use to us, but it will be of most material use to her. It affords an enemy an excellent intermediate base in a fertile valley capable of producing immense supplies. It covers his communications with his permanent base of operations, and opens to him the various routes which converge on Herat from the Oxus. Connected, as it doubtless would be, with the railway, it affords an enemy a new starting point. It brings, in fact, the Russian frontier within 380 miles of our own at Kandahar.

To neutralize this advantage as far as possible, we should develop, to the utmost, the utility of the great mountain tract which intervenes between Herat and Kabul, and stretches from the Hurri river southward to Kandahar. This tract is inhabited by Gimaks and Hazarehs, the former nominally attached to the Government of Herat, the latter to Kandahar, Ghuzni and Kabul. In 1878 all the information available at that day regarding these tribes, both north and south of the Hurri river, appeared in a paper in the Journal of the United Service Institution of India by Major H. Grey; and in 1879 the strategical importance of the mountain country they occupy was fully discussed. It is sufficient here to say that this tract flanks throughout the main route from Herat to Kandahar, and is traversed by two more direct routes between those places, and by routes leading to Herat from Kabul and Ghuzni respectively, and from Kandahar to Balkh. Undoubtedly, therefore, we should aim at establishing a paramount influence therein, and should have outposts stationed at the most important points, for holding which outposts local troops would be necessary. Moreover it is indispensable to our military tenure of Kandahar that we should have posts of observation in Farah and Seistan, and this duty would also best fall to a local force. Whether that force should be directly maintained by ourselves, or should be the contingent of the Chief whom we maintain in the Government of the Province, is a matter of detail. In the latter case they should certainly be trained and directed by British officers, and equipped on a high scale of efficiency.

Napier observes: "There is now no question of an expedition launched from a distant base against Kabul, but there is a question of a steady approach of Russia by absorption of territory, by maturing her communications with Russia, and by forming new bases of operation, in the fertile valley of the Oxus." Since Lord Napier wrote this, the process of absorption has advanced very fast. It has brought Russia to the gates of Herat and Balkh; and we are assuming, we think with safety, that it will very shortly, certainly at the close of Abdul Rahman's reign bring her to the banks of the Hurri river and the northern slopes of the Hindu Kush. To get further the absorbent process must be applied to Hazaristan, without possession of which further advance is impossible towards Eastern Afghanistan, and very difficult on the side of Kandahar. But should that process eventually comprise Hazaristan, then, in mastering the crests of the entire chain of the Siah Kush and Koh Baba, an enemy would obtain an impenetrable screen behind which to prepare for operations in either zone of Eastern or Western Afghanistan and to construct the routes whereby our position at Kandahar could be turned. An enemy possessing Hazaristan, and thus able to utilise the roads traversing it from the north and west, would have it in his power to reach the valley of the Tirnuak, and to debouch on the right flank of our line of defence, which would thus be rendered useless. Indeed, the value of our position at Kandahar depends upon the fact that the desert on the south, and the mountain mass on the north are not available for military operations. If the latter can be rendered so available, then the importance of that position is most seriously diminished. It is for this reason that we state it to be indispensable to have a paramount influence in the Hazaristan, and to station outposts therein. The Hazareh districts traversed by the Bamian route, and those intervening between the Hurri river and Kabul, Ghuzni and Kandahar, belong, so far as they are subject to any one, to the Governments of the provinces named. Of these districts, then, we should assure ourselves. From them we should draw material for our local troops. We should occupy them with outposts, and by securing a previous tenure we should make them safe against the absorbent process spoken of by Lord Napier. Towards ourselves they are specially well disposed, though intensely hostile to the Afghan Government, and in screening them from the Afghan oppression, which results from their disunion and ignorance. In assuring to them a milder administration, and in affording them employment in our service, we should make of them a defence and support the value of which, as was said in 1881, "may perhaps be overlooked by all but the most careful students of Afghan politics."

To sum up: our opinion is that, on Amir Abdul Rahman's overthrow or death, the Afghan kingdom must resolve into its original elements. That Herat and Afghan Turkestan must fall to Russia, as we cannot undertake to protect them; and that there is no military disadvantage to the defence in this. save in so far as advantage accrues therein to the attack. That the political disadvantage is of course very great, but may be compensated by the assumption of a strong military position. That such a position requires that the provinces of Kabul and Kandahar should be independent of each other, and both assume the rôle of protected States. That Kandahar must be covered by a strong British garrison, as the protected Sikh States were covered in 1810-45; but that in Kabul all that is necessary is the maintenance of good roads suitable for prompt advance to the issues of the Hindu Kush. That the military tenure of Kandahar must comprise the stationing of posts of observation in Seistan and Ferah, and especially at important points in Hazaristan. That for such Kandahar service our regular army must be largely supplemented by local forces on the pattern of the Punjab Frontier Force, and that the material of these forces should be chiefly drawn from Hazaristan. We believe that these measures will secure Hazaristan from the absorbent process of Russia, and that this mountain tract, under our influence, will play a most important rôle in the Central Asian game of war and politics. In fact, we are finally of opinion that, under these arrangements, any Russian advance towards Kandahar or Kabul would be as impracticable as would be our own advance on Herat or Balkh—without a vastly greater development of resources than it is possible for that overburdened country to compass, at any rate during any period to which human foresight can extend.

A MILITARY NECESSITY.

(Civil and Military Gazette.)

Proposals have been brought forward at intervals, for some years past, for arming the British and Eurasian population of India in support of the British troops. Articles on the subject have appeared from time to time in our columns, and detailed schemes have been propounded in the proceedings of the United Service Institution of India. Evidently, it is generally felt that some plan is needed for supplying the place of the European troops, who would for the most part be drawn away from the Indian Frontiers, in the event of a war with Russia. The European and Eurasian population of this country can amply afford a strength of fighting men equivalent to the utmost number, by which the regular European garrison would probably be reduced in such a case—say 30,000 men. The spirit of that population is quite equal to such an occasion, and it cannot be doubted that the instinct of self-preservation would lead to a prompt development of the volunteer forces, to fully the above strength should a crisis arise. But unfortunately, efficiency cannot be improvised, and it would be most imprudent to leave the provision for such an emergency to be made only at the moment when the emergency arises. Therefore it is that proposals have so often been made for providing beforehand for the event of the withdrawal from India of a large proportion of its British garrison. The measures which appear to us to be necessary are first and foremost to encourage the volunteer movement in every possible way. In Australia volunteers are paid as much weekly as efficient in India receive per month. It is the uncompensated expenses which are necessarily incurred that deter so many persons in India from joining volunteer corps, who would otherwise be ready to devote time and trouble to fitting themselves for taking part in the defence of the State. The capitation grants are quite inadequate to meet the expenses, and should be increased to at least Rs. 40 per efficient volunteer. Besides this a bonus of Rs. 100 should be given for each man passed in drill and musketry; surely this is not much for the Government to give to secure a fairly-trained soldier? A free grant of 100 rounds of ammunition per man should be made annually for rifle practice, in addition to the present allowance for the annual course. What can be more important than good shooting, especially to the volunteer soldier, who should make up thereby for his necessary inferiority in other respects to the regular army—so far as military training is concerned? If then the volunteer is willing to give his time and pains to acquire this efficiency, it is no great matter for the State to afford the ammunition.

LAND REVENUE IN HYDERABAD.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The land revenue system in the Hyderabad State is the most solid achievement which has been made in the Nizam's territories in the reform era, and the one feature of the administration in regard to which the Nizam's Government have nothing to learn from either of the adjoining Presidencies. Its annals are not greatly added to in these days, unless indeed some Sir John Eldon Gorst comes this way, and with the help of a lively imagination tells us of the wonderful means which the Nizam's servants adopt in order to make the ryots pay a rent beyond their means. In the absence of these lively chroniclers of unheard of things, however, we have to be content with plain matter-of-fact yellow books in which the progress of the work of surveying and settling the land is recorded in a very unromantic way. The most recent of these, which is probably the last that Mr. Furdonjee Jamsetjee will sign now that he has been confirmed in his post at the seat of Government, points to sustained activity in the survey and settlement of two of the three divisions, and in the classification and measurement of soils in the Northern. In the latter division the settlement has not yet been introduced, though preparations have been made for commencing it in the Nagerkarnul district. Roughly speaking, the settlement is in operation in the Mahratta districts, and in contemplation in the Telingana districts, where the conditions are peculiar, and where the principles followed elsewhere will have to be applied with regard to local circumstances. The idea which has found favour at Hyderabad hitherto has been that the settlement of Telingana should be of a more or less experimental nature. The Nizam's Government will only be following the precedent set in many British provinces if, in settling so wild a country, with half its area jungle and waste, with a very precarious cultivation, and with scarcely any village records, it limit itself to a short settlement. If the country is half as wild as it is said to be, ten years' settlement, which is understood to be in contemplation, may prove too long. Respectable precedent could be found for restricting it to five years. However, the Government seem to be sufficiently deliberate in setting about the work, and Mr. Furdonjee has given them good advice in observing in his report that though it was a pity the work was not begun earlier, it would have been injudicious to hazard an experiment which would perhaps have revolutionized the existing system without proving beneficial either to Government or the ryots. The general results of the working of the department may be briefly indicated. In the Western Division 3,348 villages have been completely settled, and the old assessment, amounting to nearly forty-three-and-a-half lakhs, has been increased by a little less than three lakhs. In the Southern Division the old assessment of a little less than twenty-two lakhs has been reduced by Rs. 23,850. An easy arrangement of boundary disputes, in which the Panchayets took a useful part, was an interesting feature in the year's work. A less satisfactory feature, though perhaps inevitable under the peculiar constitution of society in the Nizam's Dominions, was the obstruction to the settlement of boundary disputes between Government and Jagir villages through the difficulty of getting the Jagirdars' agents to appear. Hyderabad has not yet found the Richelieu who is to break down the imperium in imperio of the feudal chiefs, and meanwhile the old conflict between Khalsa and Jagir goes on at every point.

RAILWAY COMMUNICATION IN SIND.

(Bombay Gazette.)

The Kurrachee Chamber of Commerce have addressed a memorial to the Punjab Government upon the need for improved railway communication between that port and the Sutlej district, and they announce that they are preparing to reopen the question with all the influence they can bring to bear on it locally and in England, and they count upon the hearty support of the Punjab Government. This they are not unlikely to receive, though it seems strange that as the annexation of Sind to the Punjab has not yet been carried out, the Kurrachee Chamber should not have thought it worth while to address the Government of the Presidency to which Sind still belongs upon a subject to which the Bombay Government might be trusted to give careful consideration. The Punjab Government may be extremely interested in all that the Kurrachee Chamber tell them about the proposed railway through the Sind Desert and Southern Rajputana; but the locality is out of their jurisdiction, and it is as appropriate to address then on the subject as it would be to ask them what they think of a mountain railway for the Neilgherries. Much is to be said for the scheme, no doubt, and if those who believe in it can only get over the desert, they will have got over the chief of their difficulties. But the Punjab Government cannot help them over the Sind desert or over any other obstacle to the project which is marked out in country so far from their jurisdiction. The other part of the memorial relates to Punjab railway projects, in which the Government of Lahore may be got to take a close and more practical interest. The memorialists have abandoned the earlier project for a line from Bhawalpore—where the North-Western now leave the course of the Sutlej, and turns due north—to Ferozepore. They now ask that it should run from Bhawalpore to Batinda or Sirsa on the Rewari-Ferozepore line. Their case will no doubt be examined both in India and at home upon its merits. It is scarcely put upon its merits when a complaint is made that the B.B. and C.I. Railway, in building the Rewari-Ferozepore line, “invaded a territory which did not belong geographically to their system.” The intruding company went into a territory of ample resources which the existing railway systems neglected. The enterprise has been justified by results, as we may fairly hope will be the lot of any enterprise that the Kurrachee Chamber of Commerce may persuade the Government to sanction.

BENGAL.

OWING, presumably, to the paucity of European officers of the teaching staff at the Calcutta Presidency College, it is said that Mr. W. Booth, Principal of the Dacca College, is likely to be appointed a Professor of the former College, but who succeeds him at Dacca is not yet known.

ALBION RAJ KUMAR BANNERJI, son of Babu Sasipada Bannerji, of Baranagore, and the first Brahmin boy born in England, has this year passed the entrance examination of the Calcutta University in the first division. He is only of 15 years and 7 months, having been in the house of the late Miss Mary Carpenter in the year 1871.

THE report of the Health Officer of the port of Calcutta for the past year is highly unsatisfactory. The deaths among European sailors were 1443 more than the previous year. 27 deaths have occurred as against 8 in 1885, and of enteric fever 4 died as against 1. No deaths from small-pox are reported, but the fatal cases of sunstroke are numerous.

THE latest published reports from the indigo districts mentioned that rain was generally wanted both in Bengal and Behar, the plant in the latter district having begun to suffer from the long-continued drought. In the North-West Provinces and Benares the plant was very small and backward. But since then rain has fallen in most of the districts, which will, no doubt, have done much good, except perhaps in those districts, such as Midnapur and parts of Purneah and Behar, where the fall has been excessive.

LAST year the Health Officer of the port of Calcutta inspected 1,516 vessels, or 110 more than in 1885. This increase was entirely due to the new system of granting bills of health to outward bound vessels, there being an actual decrease in the number of inward bound vessels inspected, due to the fact that it was not considered necessary to inspect coasting vessels on every occasion of their visit to the port. The number of European seamen who arrived in port was 23,696, as against 21,449, the average daily number being 2,326, as against 1,693. This increase is attributed to the number of vessels remaining longer in port disengaged, owing to the low rates of freight.

THE necessity of providing a teaching University in Calcutta is being discussed; and Professor Eliot and Professor Pedler of the Presidency College have prepared a joint note in which they suggest a plan for changing the working and constitution of the Presidency College, so as to convert it into a teaching University.

A Calcutta paper says:—“The number of female candidates for the examination, to be held at the theatre of the Medical College on June 13, for admission into the certificate class of the College is 12, but applications are to be received up to the 6th inst., and a few more may apply. The number last year was 26.

MR. WYNNE, Agent and Engineer-in-Chief of the Bengal-Nagpore Railway, it is stated, visits Simla shortly to confer with the Government regarding the working plans of the line. It is not likely that any material change will be made of the alignment settled by the Government surveys, but the actual point of junction with the East Indian Railway has still got to be fixed.

BOMBAY.

LIEUTENANT H. J. FOSTER, Staff Corps, has been appointed Cantonment Magistrate of Jacobabad.

SURGEON A. F. FERGUSSON, M.B., I.M.S., has been allowed furlough to Europe for twelve months on medical certificate.

MR. W. S. COLE, Assistant Superintendent, Sind Revenue Survey, has been allowed one year's leave on medical certificate.

THE two years' furlough granted to Captain A. Keene, R.A., commanding No. 1 Mountain Battery, has been cancelled.

THE local Government have granted a further extension of service for one year, dating from the 17th inst., to Mr. Dosabhoj Framjee, C.S.I., the Second Presidency Magistrate.

SIR CHARLES TURNER and the Hon. Mr. Quinton will arrive in Bombay at the beginning of next month in connection with the Public Service Commission.

MR. C. B. PRITCHARD, C.S., C.S.I., has been appointed Honorary Colonel of the Sind Volunteer Rifle Corps, vice Honorary Colonel H. N. B. Erskine, resigned.

HIS EXCELLENCY the Governor in Council has been pleased to appoint Mr. Rienzi Walton, M.Inst. C.E., a member of the committee on the future extension of the city of Bombay.

DURING the absence of Surgeon-Major Waters, Surgeon R. Manser will act as Professor of Physiology, and Surgeon H. W. B. Boyd as Professor of Pathology and Curator of the Pathological Museum, Grant Medical College.

THE season report states that rain has fallen in parts of seven districts. Preparations for kharif cultivation is still going on. Fever and small-pox in parts of seven, cattle disease in parts of ten, and cholera in parts of six districts.

A NUMBER of friends recently met at the Apollo Bunder, to bid farewell to Mr. Thomas Lang, for long the popular agent of the Standard Life Assurance Office here, who proceeded to England, by the mail steamer, to join a high appointment in the London Office.

MADRAS.

THE Madras Government, it appears, agree with the Local High Court Judges that the amalgamation of the duties of the Clerk of the Crown and Crown prosecutor are, from their nature, impracticable; but they think that, as the duties devolving upon the Clerk of the Crown are inconsiderable, they might be performed by the Deputy Registrar, and the Clerk of the Crown abolished as a separate appointment. They also coincide in opinion with the Judges that the recommendation made by the Finance Committee for the appointment of an Official Receiver is one which does not call for adoption, as present arrangements are found to work satisfactorily.

IN accordance with the recommendation of the Surgeon-General, Government have sanctioned the removal of the head-quarters of the District Medical and Sanitary officer of North Arcot and of his assistant, from Chittoor to Vellore, and, as a consequence, the transfer of the Civil Surgeon from Nellore to Chittoor. The change has been sanctioned owing to the greater importance and more central position of Vellore, whence the work of inspection and supervision can, as regards time and convenience, be more effectively and economically performed, whilst at the same time no extra expense of any kind is involved.

IT is stated that the site most in favour with the Madras Government for the new High Court is between Messrs. Parry and Company's Office and the lighthouse. The local paper, however, thinks that in the present condition of the Exchequer it is “absolutely wrong to spend many lakhs of rupees on a building if the old one can be adapted at a much smaller cost.”

THE Cuddalore Mahajana Sabah has resolved that this being the year of Her Gracious Majesty the Queen-Empress's Jubilee the Sabah considers it appropriate to request Her Majesty's Government to mark the occasion by introducing into the Government of this country an adequate representative element, and to that end to authorise the appointment of a Commission (of which one-fourth of the members shall be persons elected by the delegates of the late National Congress) to elaborate schemes for giving effect to the concession prayed for.

BURMA.

THE following arrangements in the Postal Department will be shortly carried out. Mr. Hyres to be Deputy Postmaster-General in Burma, and Mr. Ham Assistant Director-General. Mr. Short to be Deputy Postmaster-General in Central India, and Mr. Barton Groves to the same appointment in Eastern Bengal.

For the purposes of the engineering department the Irrawaddy and Sittang lines are to be amalgamated and re-distributed into three divisions. The first division will extend from Promé to the thirty-ninth mile on the Irrawaddy line, that is about midway between Wanetchaung and Taikkyi, the second from the thirty-ninth mile to Pegu, and the third from Pegu to Toungoo. This arrangement will necessitate the entertainment of an additional engineer.

A FRENCH CONSUL AT MANDALAY.—The presence of a French Consul in Mandalay is against all rules established by the Government of India, which never allows any foreign Consuls in the interior of its provinces. This breach of rule is owing to Sir Charles Bernard. We have said nothing about the matter up to this time because we naturally thought that the Consul was sent here to represent the interests of his countrymen at the inquiry ordered by the Government of India into the claims put forward by the various nationalities against the late Burmese Government. To our surprise, however, the French Consul started for Bhamo on the very day that the inquiry began, and came back when the inquiry was closed. This being the case, it is difficult to account for his presence here, much less can we show—or he himself show—of what use he is here. We think the British Government would do well to cease to recognise him as Consul for France, and the Government of the latter country would do well to abolish the office. It will certainly be a means of economy on the part of France, since in the French Republic economy is a Gordre du jour, and an expensive Consulate out here is not required.—Mandalay Herald.

SIR STEURT BAYLEY'S PREDECESSOR.—On the occasion of unveiling a portrait of Sir Rivers Thompson, at Calcutta, the other day, Sir Steurt Bayley said:—"I do not propose to dwell on the qualities personal and official of Sir Rivers Thompson; it is but a few weeks since he left these shores, and from that time, summaries of his career and sketches of his character have been given both in the Press and on the platform. I can, therefore, add nothing that you are not acquainted with. My own acquaintance with Sir Rivers dates from the Eton play-fields forty years ago, when I first went to that school as a small boy. I collect the awe and admiration with which I regarded, among the old boys, one who was adored by the whole school for his prowess in athletics and his abilities. Since that period perhaps my awe has somewhat diminished, but I have not lost my admiration for his moral and personal qualities, his patience and pluck, and his unswerving loyalty, together with his deep sense of duty. I saw this portrait grow towards perfection under the hands of that accomplished artist, Mr. Archer, who has succeeded in giving you something more than a portrait; he has got at the mind, and has given not only the face, but a meaning face. I congratulate you on adding this portrait to a number of others, amongst which it is not unworthy to take a place—another addition to the numerous mementoes of unforgotten Indian heroes."

The foundation stone of the Imperial Institute will be laid by the Queen on Monday, July 4. The site is on land lately occupied by the Colonial and Indian Exhibition. The ceremony will take place in a specially constructed pavilion, in the presence of the Royal Family, the foreign Sovereigns and members of foreign reigning families then present in this country, Her Majesty's Ministers, the great officers of State, several princes and distinguished natives of India, the members of both Houses of Parliament, representatives of foreign Powers, and public officials and delegates from the United Kingdom, the Colonies, and India. The pavilion is a large, substantial building of timber, now in course of erection. It will contain seating accommodation for nearly 11,000 persons, and is so built that every seat will afford a view of the whole of the proceedings. The Queen will proceed to the site attended by the great officers of State and an escort of Life Guards. The route will be kept by the Household Cavalry, and a large number of troops will be on duty in the streets and adjacent to the site. The united bands of the Household Brigade, the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, and students of the Royal College of Music will perform and sing—under the conductorship of Sir Arthur Sullivan—the music of an ode written by Mr. Lewis Morris and composed by Sir Arthur Sullivan. The National Anthem and "Rule Britannia" will be sung by leading artistes. On the arrival of Her Majesty at the main entrance in Exhibition-road a procession will be formed, in which the members of the Royal Family and distinguished visitors, the organising committee, Her Majesty's Ministers, and others will take part. Addresses will be read by the Prince of Wales on behalf of the Organising Committee of the Imperial Institute and the Royal Commissioners of the Great Exhibition of 1851, in his capacity of president of both bodies.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel R. McG. Stewart, R.A., has been appointed Aide-de-Camp to the Queen, to fill the vacancy caused by the promotion of Colonel Teesdale. Colonel Stewart served in the Hazara Campaign in 1868, against the tribes on the Black Mountain in the Afghan War in 1878-79, and with the expedition to the Soudan in 1885. The command of the 1st Battalion Gordon Highlanders, which becomes vacant by the retirement of Colonel F. F. Daniell, will, it is understood, be given to Colonel J. E. Boyes. Colonel Daniell served in the Egyptian War of 1882, in the Soudan Expedition in 1884 and in the Nile Expedition of 1884-85. Colonel Boyes served throughout the Egyptian War of 1882, and in the Soudan Expedition in 1884, and was present in the engagements at El Teb and Tennai, in the Nile Expedition in 1884-85. On Colonel J. W. Green vacating the command of the 1st Battalion Devonshire Regiment the appointment will be given to Lieutenant-Colonel E. L. Street. Colonel Green, and Lieutenant-Colonel E. L. Street both served with the 11th Regiment in the Afghan War of 1879-80, and received the medal. The command of the 2nd Battalion York and Lancaster Regiment becomes vacant by the retirement of Colonel J. M. T. Simpson, and it is understood Lieutenant-Colonel A. H. Luck will obtain the appointment. Colonel Simpson served throughout the Egyptian War of 1882. The command of the 1st Battalion Cameron Highlanders falls vacant by the retirement of Colonel H. H. St. Leger, D.S.O., and it is understood Lieutenant Colonel E. Everett, D.S.O., will obtain the appointment. Lieutenant-Colonel Everett served in the Indian Campaign of 1858-9, also in the Soudan Expedition of 1884-85. The command of the 1st Battalion Dorsetshire Regiment, which becomes vacant by the retirement of Colonel J. G. Smyth, will, it is understood, be obtained by Colonel M. W. E. Gosset. Colonel Smyth served with the 39th Regiment at the siege and fall of Sebastopol in 1855. Colonel Gosset served with the 54th Regiment during the Indian Mutiny, and in Lord Clyde's Campaign in Oude in 1858-59. He also served as aide-de-camp to Lord Chemsford in the Kaffir War of 1878. He again served in the Zulu War of 1879 as aide-de-camp to Lord Chemsford. He again went to South Africa on special service in 1881, and served under Sir Evelyn Wood in the Boer War as assistant adjutant and quartermaster-general. The command of the 2nd Battalion Northamptonshire Regiment, which becomes vacant by the retirement of Colonel C. E. Foster, will be given to Lieutenant-Colonel D. G. Anderson. Both Colonel Foster and Colonel Anderson served in the Zulu War of 1879, receiving the medal with clasp.

MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

LIEUTENANT BIRDWOOD, 1st Bombay Lancers, and Lieutenant Pollard, 7th Bengal Cavalry, have been appointed extra Aides-de-Camp to the Viceroy.

THE Provincial Commander-in-Chief is pleased to make the following appointments on his Personal Staff:—Captain H. S. Fitzgerald, 2nd Battalion Durham Light Infantry, to be Military Secretary, and to perform the duties of Aide-de-Camp and Interpreter in addition, pending further orders. Lieutenant H. G. Carnegie, 1st Battalion Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, to be Aide-de-Camp, Provisional. Risaldar Major Dhaukal Singh, Sirdar Bahadur, 3rd (Queen's Own) Light Cavalry, to be Native Aide-de-Camp.

The following appears in General Orders:—It is with deep regret that the Commander-in-Chief finds himself compelled to notice in General Orders a matter which, as being to the discredit of an officer of long and gallant service, his Excellency would gladly have passed over in silence. Towards the end of 1885, Colonel H. H. Lyster, C.B., V.C., quitted the command of the 3rd Goorkhas. In the following spring serious misconduct occurred in the battalion, and inquiry showed that this failure of discipline originated with Colonel Lyster. During this officer's tenure of command the men had been accustomed to receive compensation for dearth of rice at a rate to which they were in no way entitled, and the excessive compensation was drawn and passed on certificates signed by Colonel Lyster which contained a misrepresentation of fact. The discontinuance of these unauthorised rates was not understood by the men, and produced discontent, which culminated in a serious breach of discipline. In this matter Colonel Lyster's action was so improper, and his error of judgment so conspicuous and dangerous (as was proved by the event), that it has become the duty of the Commander-in-Chief to place on public record his emphatic disapproval of Colonel Lyster's conduct. Colonel Lyster has afforded an example of an officer, who with the best intentions for the good of his regiment, has by a lax interpretation of his responsibility towards the Government, done his men a most serious injury. His failure in his duty to the State has entailed a failure in his duty to those placed under his command. His misconduct has not only brought discredit on himself, but has involved his regiment in serious trouble.

The new Martini Henry rifles issued to the first Battalion, Leinster Regiment, behaved badly on the review parade on the 24th ult. in failing to extract the empty cartridge cases, and thus marring the effect of the feu de joie. The rifles are believed to be all right, the jamming being due to the use of refilled blank cases.

SERGEANTS of the Volunteer Force at home of ten years' standing are to be allowed to retain their rank and wear their uniform, provided they are specially recommended by their commanding officers. The authority of allowing this is vested in the General Officer Commanding the District.

THE following notification conferring the Order of Merit on certain of the 18th Bengal Infantry is published in the Gazette of India:—"Havildar Sobhnath Pande, for conspicuous gallantry at Oo, on the Chindwin river, on 28th Oct., 1886, on which occasion, being in command of the escort which accompanied the late Mr. Gleeson, Assistant Commissioner, from Mingin, he bravely held his ground after Mr. Gleeson was killed, and repulsed the repeated attacks of a vastly superior number of the enemy. Havildar Ramcharit Singh, for conspicuous gallantry on the same occasion, in endeavouring to rescue Mr. Gleeson when attacked by the enemy. In making this attempt he was severely wounded in five places. Naick (now Havildar) Umrao Singh, for conspicuous gallantry in having, on the same occasion, charged with four sepoy into a village occupied by the enemy, driven the latter from their position and burnt the village. Sepoy Dirpal Singh, for conspicuous gallantry, during the retirement from Oo, on the evening of the 28th October, 1886, in having brought off the raft (which had run aground) on which the killed and wounded of the escort had been embarked, and conducted it in safety down the river."

THE arrangements made by the Mint for the issue of the new series of gold and silver coins have caused a good deal of dissatisfaction among bankers, through whom they are being supplied to the public, the new coins not being at present obtainable in anything like the quantities required. The universal opinion of those who have inspected these fresh efforts of the Mint is that they do its artistic skill no credit. The new dollar is a handsome coin in a way, and so is the new half-crown and the two-pound gold piece; but the whole of them are spoilt by the bust of the Queen, "with the crown toppling off the back of her head," as has been aptly said. And the fact that the smaller silver coins are destitute of all statement of their value is also considered a great fault. The value is not stamped even on the sixpence, whereas the proper innovation would have been to put it distinctly on all the silver coins. The florin and the half-crown are not very distinguishable, and the dollar and the crown-piece are less so. The die for the new crown pieces has been so badly smashed at the Mint that no further impressions can be taken from it, and a new die will have to be cut.

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

FREDERICK F. X. DE MERODE.*

Frederick Francis Xavier de Merode held the high and important office of Minister to Pius IX., during the eventful period which preceded the triumph of the revolution in Rome, and the subsequent loss of the Pope's temporal possessions in Italy. The biography which Monseigneur Besson has now given to the world will be read with interest if only as drawing aside the veil which shrouded the inner life of the Vatican during a most momentous crisis in the Church's history. And assuredly in some respects there is much to admire in the heroic efforts made to avert defeat. The Pontifical army was but a handful of ill-organised, ill-clad, ill-fed men. M. de Merode took them in hand, and in a few short months "the Pope had eighteen thousand men under arms, well-armed and well-clothed, only too happy to serve his cause, and each and all ready to shed their blood in his defence." It is matter of history that Providence ranged itself as usual on the side of "big battalions," and his Holiness lost his independence. But there was a Nemesis. Did not Napoleon III., who betrayed and deceived the church, lose his army and his empire? "His posterity," says the pious chronicler, "has been destroyed, and the hand of God has smitten his whole race."

Thus much for the Pope. As regards M. de Merode, the present biography shows him to have been a man fertile in resource, boundless in courage, unstinted in benevolence. Calm in prosperity, philosophic in adversity, beloved by his friends, feared by his enemies, he left an unspotted name and an unblemished record. Alike in life as in death, he was honoured and respected, and his memory still remains fresh in the hearts of the many who were recipients of his bounty and the sharers of his wealth.

As regards the translation, it could have been wished that the impersonal form adopted by the French had been Anglicised for the benefit of readers in this country. "One felt that the letter, &c.," to quote an instance is intelligible, but it is scarcely in a form which commends itself to British ears. In other respects there is no cause of complaint, and Lady Herbert has succeeded in giving a very readable translation of a very readable book.

THE ROSICRUCIANS: THEIR RITES AND MYSTERIES.†

"The Rosicrucians!" Who were they? What were they? The questions are easy to ask, but they are not so readily answered. Of course, it may be replied that they were a set of philosophers who studied the occult mysteries of nature—enthusiasts with an idea; labouring, almost unknown, and perhaps entirely unheeded, in the inner recesses of their homes. Sometimes, too, they are pictured in the well-known tableau of Dr. Faustus and his companion Mephistopheles.

Thanks, however, to Mr. Jennings's most erudite and valuable work, which has now reached its third edition, the ignorance on the subject is more or less dispelled. And what a strange and well nigh marvellous vista that indefatigable historian of the Rosicrucians has presented to his readers! What mysteries he has unravelled! What theories he propounds—so subtle, so weird, so enchanting! And what a light is shed upon the surroundings of everyday life! What marvellous surprises arise at every turn, some distressing, some pleasing, but all astounding! The grand theory which is propounded in these volumes is that all emblems throughout the entire world are symbols of "phallic" worship, reminders that creation is the one aim and object of human existence. He traces these tokens in the "lingar" of Asia, in the Druidical stories of England's early days, in the pagoda of China, and even in the churches of this land, with their spires and their aisles, each and all typical of procreative power.

Mr. Jennings, too, has some quaint traditions and some novel theories. Take, for example, the destruction of the famous library at Alexandria, an act of infamy generally imputed to the bigotry of the Caliph Omar, but in these volumes ascribed to the fear of that potentate, who dreaded the alchemical lore stored up in that precious and unrivalled collection of learned treasures. Once, again, we are told that white is an unlucky colour, as witness amongst other calamities the disasters of the White Rose of York as compared with the Red Rose of Lancaster. Hence the necessity that on ascending the throne of England the Prince of Wales should discard the name of Albert (equal white) and assuming the historical appellation of his ancestors male be the seventh Edward, amongst the monarchs of this mighty Empire. Sailors, we learn, do not generally wear a beard out of compliment to the Goddess of the Waves, a smooth face being supposed to be more in harmony with the female gentleness which looks after the welfare of "Jack tar" afloat.

These are a few instances culled from the endless array of reflective theories and odd stories which teem in Mr. Jennings's "Rosicrucians." Valuable, interesting, and instructive, the work teaches how dangerous it is to condemn what is not understood, or to criticise what is imperfectly realised. Liberality of judgment should be the motto of mankind in these days of intelligence and enlightenment, and a study of the mysterious will clear the path in this direction from many of the notions conceived in intolerance and nurtured in hardness of heart. Read, gentle reader, and be wise!

BOOKS FOR REVIEW.—"The Agricultural Labourer," by T. E. Kebbel (W. H. Allen and Co.); "The Fate of the Mughal Empire," by H. G. Keane, C.I.E. (Third Edition.) (W. H. Allen and Co.)

DEATHS IN CALCUTTA.—During the week ended the 14th of May there were 155 deaths registered in Calcutta, giving a death-rate of 18.6 per thousand per annum. In the previous week there were 165 deaths, and the death-rate was 19.8 per thousand. There were 0 deaths from the small-pox, 21 from cholera, 41 from fevers, 17 from tetanus, and 3 from causes not specified. The deaths are thus classified:—0 non-Asiatics, 3 mixed races, 59 Hindoos, 48 Mahomedans, and 5 other races. The Health Officer adds the following remarks:—The total number of deaths registered during the week ending 14th of May was 155 against 165, and 202 in the two preceding weeks, and higher than the corresponding week of last year by 5. There were 21 deaths from cholera against 28 and 60 in the two preceding weeks; the number is less than the average of the past quinquennium by 41. There were no deaths from small-pox during the week. The mortality from fevers and bowel complaints amounted to 41 and 7 respectively against 52, and 11 in the preceding week. The general death-rate of the week was 18.6 per mile per annum, against 29.1, the mean of the last five years.

JAPAN TO ENGLAND BY THE CANADIAN PACIFIC ROUTE.—The Canadian Pacific Railway Company furnish the following dates and facts about their route from Japan to England:—"The Abyssinia left Yokohama on May 30, and reached Vancouver on June 13. Her passengers reached Montreal on June 20. They were detained a day and a half in New York waiting for the departure of the City of Rome, which is due in Liverpool on Thursday next, June 30, or less than thirty-two days from Yokohama. A few chests of tea, as evidence of what can be done, are coming by the City of Rome. Were the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's steamers on the Pacific a day and a-half at least would be saved on that ocean. At least one day can be saved over the time at present allowed for the transcontinental run; and the new Canadian Atlantic service will, it is hoped, work in with the Pacific service so as to avoid delays. On the whole we can calculate on making the time between Japan and England less than thirty days for mails, passengers, and light freight. Under the new P. and O. contract, which provides for accelerated speed, the mail time from Japan, via Brindisi, will be forty-four days. For passengers and freight, via Gibraltar, the time will be fifty three days."

If the Times is right in stating that the Afghan Commission at St. Petersburg has failed, there is no eventuality for which Government ought to be unprepared. It is true that the matters which Sir West Ridgeway and Captain A. F. Barrow had to decide in conference at St. Petersburg were only matters of detail, the general outline of an agreement having been previously arrived at by the two Governments; and, if both Governments desire peace, they may in direct negotiation prove mutually more yielding than the soldier-diplomats who have just agreed to differ. We can well imagine that Sir West Ridgeway on one side, and Colonel Kuhlberg on the other, take a warmer interest in the subject in dispute—a few miles more or less of Afghan soil—than Ministers of Foreign Affairs who have to watch the affairs of two hemispheres, and have not risked their own lives in the Afghan wastes. If peaceably disposed, the Ministers for Foreign Affairs may yet smilingly give and take enough to patch up an agreement. If, on the other hand, as there is some reason to suspect, the Russian Foreign Office hopes to take early advantage of Afghan complications, against England, the final rupture of negotiations will not be long delayed. We have recently, at some length, traced the policy which, under all the circumstances, it would be wisest for the Government of India to follow in view of Afghan troubles; leaving out of sight the contingencies of a war in Europe between Russia and England. Of the chances of that contest we have written many times, and always with confidence in the ultimate victory of Great Britain. The fate of Central Asia would not be decided in Central Asia; for the simple reason that Russia and India are not there within effective striking distance. Provided that we can assume a defensive position on our North-West Frontier, strong enough to make an invasion of India impossible, and to guarantee the safety of Cabul and Candahar, we could afford to wait until the issue of the European conflict left Russia so crushed, that England could from Downing-street dictate the fate of Herat, Balkh, and Merv.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1887.

INDIA—1837-1887.

RETROSPECTION is seldom an agreeable or profitable mental exercise, for if honestly carried out it must, so far as individual experience is concerned, be accompanied by much misgivings and many pangs of remorse. The "juggling fiend," who whispers "it might have been otherwise and better," is ever ready with that aphorism at one's ear; and so it is generally wiser to let the dead past bury its dead. It is not given to every man to be content with his own bygone actions. "Vain was the fool, and false as vain," says the poet, "who said were he ordained to run his long career of life again, he would do all that he had done." A state of mind so serene as that of the French philosopher referred to is exceptional in individuals; it is hardly possible to a nation. It is true that poets, philosophers, journalists, and historians to-day are reviewing the past fifty years of English history in enthusiastic terms—writing, as it were, with milk on rose leaves, and seeing nothing but joy and gladness in the Jubilee retrospect; but allowances must be made for the gush of the moment. We are just now a little off our heads, and we protest regarding England's moral and material progress perhaps a little too much. But with regard to the past fifty years, so far as India is concerned, the retrospect of England's action there will, we think, bear the strictest, nay, the fiercest scrutiny. The story may not be free from blemishes, from shortcomings, from confessions of errors committed and even of wrongs done, but it is a story nevertheless of moral and material progress, of marvellous achievements, not of war only, but of peace—a story of English endeavour and success of which every Englishman must be proud—for which India will yet be grateful, and which other nations may read with advantage and with envy. Sir Richard Temple tells this story in the July number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review succinctly but forcibly, with all the well-known power of his graphic pen, and the article ought to be read by every student of Indian history. For Sir Richard gives "facts, reasons, and considerations why not only a patriotic Briton, but also a thoughtful and well-informed Indian, may look back with pleasure on the fifty years' period which ends on June 21, 1887. For much as the British Empire all over the world has grown and changed during this time, nowhere have such growth and change been more conspicuous than in the Indian Empire as regards both the land and the people."

Sir Richard marshals in support of this assertion the principal facts under ten headings:—

- I. The Imperial area and surveys, the territorial acquisitions, the frontiers.
- II. The population, the census, the classification of religions and occupations, the condition of the people.
- III. The revenues, land tax, the finance and public debt.
- IV. The Army, European and Native, the Navy and Marine.
- V. The ocean-borne commerce, the inland trade, the roads, and the railways.
- VI. The famines, the canals of irrigation, the forests.
- VII. The public administration, the Covenanted Service, the Uncovenanted Service, European and Native.
- VIII. The legislation and the Courts of Justice, the land-settlements, the police, and the prisons.
- IX. The national education, the universities, the aspirations of the educated Natives.
- X. The changes in rites and customs, the public charities, the religious missions.

Under each of these headings Sir Richard illustrates briefly and summarily, but with great skill in condensation, the difference between the condition of India in 1837 and in 1887.

Of course in an article in these columns we can only impinge on this vast subject—the influence of British rule on India, but we commend the perusal of Sir Richard Temple's paper to every earnest and honest inquirer of truth. It is a simple but straightforward reply to those pseudo-philanthropists who are never tired of decrying that influence, and who delight in preaching from platform and press the pernicious doctrine that India should be handed over to the Indians themselves—home rule for Ireland, home rule for India. Left to themselves the "Indians," as British ignorance chooses to style the various races and peoples who make up our Indian Empire, would do nothing in the way of material progress—they would content themselves with the ancient ways and roads. Under British rule during the past fifty years sixty-five millions sterling have been spent in material improvements, railways, canals, and other public works. With regard to trade, the total amount of imports and exports, which stood at twenty-two millions sterling of annual value in 1837, now stands in 1887 at 141 millions! Of the total importation of manufactured articles into India more than nine-tenths are from the United Kingdom, and fifteen-sixteenths of the shipping that carries the ocean-borne traffic is under the British flag. There are 10,000 miles of metalled roads in India to-day, and the railways have a total length of 13,000 miles.

These are hard, dry facts, but which speak eloquently for themselves, telling, as they do, of the material progress of India under British rule. They form an argument in favour of that rule which cannot be answered or gainsayed by those pessimists who delight in declaring that our sway over India is for evil rather than for good. The story told by Sir Richard Temple is one of progress and beneficent power. "The retrospect," as he himself says, "is that of movement ever onward. The events invariably are those of progression; while of retrogression there is not a single instance. With military and political victories have been mingled disasters and misfortunes. But usually the disaster has been repaired without leaving permanent traces of evil behind it. Amidst the successes in every department of the national existence there are, indeed, but too many errors and failures apparent; yet neither the errors nor the failures are irremediable, and with the blessing of Providence they will be remedied." This is true, for the star of India is the star of Hope, and in the light of that star, as Lord Mayo once said, the Government of India walks.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE WITHIN THE ABBEY.

FROM an early hour on Tuesday morning the venerable Abbey in Westminster assumed an air of unwonted activity. The privileged few who were permitted to witness the grandest and most impressive scene beheld in this the nineteenth century of grace bestirred themselves in time to get seats where they could see as well as hear; and assuredly the fortunate occupants of the better places were well and amply repaid for any trouble they took. True there was much waiting to be done, much patience to be exhibited, but was there not also much to interest and to please? Take merely the scene within the Abbey. What a superb display of artistic colouring! The building itself, so sombre, so impressive, so huge, seemed to gain effect from the seething mass of humanity which sat within its walls. What a display, too, of uniforms of all sorts, descriptions, and colours! The red and blue of our Naval and Military services were of course predominant, but there were not a few who wore the sombre and unpretentious Levée dress. There were Mayors resplendent in their robes and chains of office, some in white ermine, some in scarlet cloth, some in fur; there were legal luminaries, with their quaint wigs, an appanage which in itself seems to entitle the possessor to the title of "learned brother." There were, too, costumes of the gentler sex of all sorts, forms, shapes, and devices, blending effectively amidst the more regular but less effective array allowable for those who bear the courtesy rank of "lords of creation."

Then, when the proceedings began, what an unrivalled sight met the eye! As one by one Royalties of comparatively lesser rank passed along the centre way the eye got in a degree accustomed to the greatness of the hour. At one time it was the noble-looking "George," with his Field-Marshal's baton. Every inch a soldier, he looked in deed, as well as in word, the Commander-in-Chief of the Forces of Great Britain. At another time young Princesses, barely emerged from the nursery, smiled and bowed graciously to the assembled multitude, many of whom yearned heartily to kiss the little cherubs, whose presence seemed to lend an angelic grace to the proceedings of the day. But while this and much more of the same nature was attracting attention there passed along celebrities from foreign climes, the guests of Her Majesty at this auspicious time—the Maharajah Holkar, the rollicking ruler of Indore; the Lords of Bhurtpur and Jodhpore, the Thakurs of Gondal and Morvi, the Rao of Cutch, all resplendent with Oriental drapery and bespangled with priceless jewels. But amongst the number none attracted more attention than the Chief of Kuch Behar as he stepped along, escorting his Maharani, the first of the race of Indian feudatories who ever brought to present to his Sovereign the wife of his bosom, the sharer of his high position. The swarthy, and it may be thought astonished, monarch from the Sandwich Isles did not escape notice, as she stepped along in the midst of a scene which will live, perchance, in the recollection of a monarch unaccustomed to the magnificence of England's proudest pageant on that its proudest day.

But what pen can do justice to the Royal procession itself, as the fanfare of trumpets caused all eyes to strain their sockets to catch a glimpse of this most indescribable scene of bewildering grandeur, when the Queen, surrounded by all her family, by all the officers of State, by such an array of foreign potentates as has never before visited, and may never again touch the strand of, dear old England's shores, passed along in all the might and majesty of British sovereignty! It was a sight never to be forgotten. No tongue could tell it forth, no description convey an adequate notion of the most glorious pageant of modern times. If, however, the eye was enraptured what an occasion it was for reflection. The Queen had visited the Abbey to return thanks for the mercies received during a reign of fifty years. Laying aside for the nonce the familiar title of Queen, she appeared rather in her capacity as "Defender of the Faith," letting forth to the nation—aye, to the civilised world—that the mightiest Ruler of the mightiest Empire under Heaven's canopy felt and recognised that the mercies she had received were showered by a still mightier hand, of One whom she had honoured during her long reign, and from whose bounteous hand she had received the many mercies and blessings which had been showered upon her during half-a-century of power. Sceptics may sneer, and infidels may scorn, but there are not a few reflective persons who prefer to dwell upon this aspect of the Queen's Jubilee, and who love to think that there was an eternal fitness in things that the embodiment of all power in this realm should humble herself in obeisance to a still greater than herself, and in deep humility of soul, and earnestness of heart, plead in tones of supplication "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us," but unto "Thee be all the glory given."

Gratitude was uppermost, but was it not an occasion for pride? As the Queen stood at the throne and looked down upon the assembled multitude, should she not glory in her greatness? All that is grand, all that is mighty, all that is intellectual, all that is beautiful, hemmed round the Sovereign of these realms to pay homage to their Ruler, and mingle with her praises the thanksgiving of a grateful nation. There was the flower of the nobility, the faithful Lords and Commons, the keenest intellects of this our day, the warriors who had fought and bled for their country, old men and children, young men and maidens, each and all present at the footsteps of the Throne. It was, as it were, a country's tribute to a country's Queen, telling forth in tones clear, distinct, and unmistakable, that the Victoria of 1887 has, by an unsullied reign of fifty years, strengthened the bonds of affection which in 1837 had linked her to her subjects; proclaiming throughout the whole civilised world that the maiden of eighteen summers, now the widow of mature years, had been faithful to her charge; had nurtured, protected, and governed her people righteously, fearlessly, and successfully, bidding the uttermost parts of the earth take note that we are one united race, that despite differences of opinion England is one in heart, one in love for their Queen, one in any attempt to injure her realm, one in loyalty and devotion to the Throne, one in thankfulness to the Ruler of Heaven and Earth, one in a determination to resist to the uttermost all who are enemies to their Country, their Queen, and their God.

There were present in the India Office box, in the south choir gallery, Sir H. Rawlinson, Sir E. Bradford, Sir F. Goldsmid, Sir J. and Lady Brind, Sir H. and Lady Lamsden, Sir O. Burne, Sir W. Wyllie, Sir H. Thuillier, Sir W. and Lady Olpherts, Sir S. Browne, Sir H. Daly, Sir J. Hills-Jones, Sir P. and Lady Lumsden, Sir F. Pollock, Sir John Strachey, Lady Eyre, Sir C. Reid, Sir Orfeur Cavanagh, Sir R. Montgomery, Sir R. Meade, Sir R. Garth, Sir J. Fayrer, Sir G. Malcolm, Sir R. Sandeman, General Allen Johnson, Sir J. Watson, V.C., Surgeon-General Cornish, and Mr. C. R. Low, I.N.

PERHAPS the best view of the Jubilee procession on Tuesday last was that obtained at Waterloo-place, where Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co. had made spacious and excellent arrangements for a large number of guests, including several officials from the India Office and their friends. About 300 ladies and gentlemen were accommodated with seats in and in front of the well-known premises—sacred to the genius of many a dead and many a living Anglo-Indian of literary fame—and everything was done in the true spirit of Eastern hospitality to make the day an enjoyable one, for after the procession had gone by the guests partook of a sumptuous luncheon provided by their hospitable hosts. Invitations had been issued to Sir Richard Temple, Sir George Birdwood, and the other official celebrities of the India Office, and amongst the guests present were:—

BOMBAY CAVALRY.—Jemadar Kanchan Singh, 2nd Bombay Lancers; Ressaldar Muhammad Buksh, 3rd Bombay Cavalry.

The garden was very tastefully laid out, the flower-beds in full bloom and looking exceedingly gay, while the foliage of the trees gave a pleasant shade under which the party was assembled. A military band was in attendance, and played at intervals during the afternoon. There was a very large attendance of the club members, both English and Indian, and the scene was further graced by the presence of numerous ladies. Refreshments were laid out in the grounds, and the guests remained till a late hour, some of the Princes staying a considerable time, all evidently enjoying the afternoon.

Each of the officers of the Cavalry Contingent, who all came in their handsome and soldier-like uniforms, were introduced to Lord Northbrook and Lady Emma Baring, who did the honours on the occasion.

RECEPTION AT THE EAST INDIA UNITED SERVICE CLUB.

The members of the East India United Service Club gave a magnificent reception, at their club-house in St. James's-square, on Saturday night, to the illustrious Indian Princes recently arrived to celebrate the Jubilee. The exterior of the club-house was brilliantly illuminated. The entrance hall was lined on both sides by banks of flowers. The first floor, a suite of four rooms, was thrown open for the reception, all the apartments being profusely decorated with flowers. The second floor was appropriated for smoking, and supper, laid out for 200 at a time, was served in the coffee-room. The Hungarian band were in attendance and played throughout the evening.

Subjoined is a list of the Indian Princes who attended on the occasion, with their principal attendants:—

His Highness the Maharajah Holkar of Indore, accompanied by Sir Lepel Griffin, Political Officer, Captain N. Franks, Captain Gubbins, Surgeon-Major R. Caldecott, and General Balmohana; his Highness the Rao of Kutch, accompanied by Kumar Shri Kalooba, and Colonel Goodfellow, Political Officer; their Highnesses the Maharajah and Maharanee of Kuch Behar, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Bignell; his Highness the Thakore Sahib of Morvi, accompanied by Colonel Wodehouse, Political Officer; the Thakore Sahib of Limri, accompanied by Colonel Nutt, Political Officer; Kunwar Hurnam Sing, Ahluwalia, C.I.E., of Kapurthalla, and the Kanwarani, accompanied by the Rev. J. S. Woodside; the Nawab Zaffer Jung Shums-ul-Dowlah Shums-ul-Moolk of Hyderabad, with Mr. Blathwayt; Sirdar Diler-ul-Moolk, C.I.E., and Mr. Seyed Nooraden; the Bhurtore Deputation, Colonel Ganga Baksh and Dr. Tyler, Political Officer; the Baroda Deputation, attended by Shamians Sampatao Gaekwar Rao Bahadur and R. V. Ohannucker. The Maharajah Sir Petrab Sing, K.C.S.I. brother of the Maharajah of Johdpore, and the Nawab Amir-i-Akbar Asman Jah, were prevented attending owing to previous engagements. The Reception Committee, who had the management of the whole of the arrangements, were Mr. E. Drummond (late Bengal Civil Service), chairman; Colonel J. C. Lockwood (late 20th Hussars), and Colonel A. J. Vibart (late Bombay Staff Corps), vice-chairmen; Colonel A. R. Wilson (late Bombay Staff Corps), Colonel C. W. Fletcher (late Bengal Cavalry), Colonel G. W. Cox (late Madras Army), Mr. F. M. Kinderley (late Madras Civil Service), Colonel J. F. Porter (late Madras Cavalry), Captain R. N. Taylor (late Madras Staff Corps), Sir C. Grant, K.C.S.I. (late Bengal Civil Service), Colonel J. B. Slater (late Bengal Staff Corps), Colonel T. T. Turton (Madras Staff Corps), Major-General J. F. T. Ross (late Bombay Staff Corps), Colonel Clement J. Smith (Madras Staff Corps), Major-General F. J. Hicks (late Madras Staff Corps), Deputy Surgeon-General W. H. Harris (late Madras Medical Establishment), Rev. A. H. Alcock (late Madras Ecclesiastical Establishment), Mr. C. D. Field (late Bengal Civil Service), Colonel W. H. G. Palmer (Madras Staff Corps), Major-General H. Watson (late Madras Staff Corps), Lieut.-Colonel T. E. L. Higginson (Madras Staff Corps), Major W. O. Thompson (Bengal Staff Corps), Mr. H. F. Brown (late member of the Legislative Council, Bengal), Mr. A. Brandreth (late Bengal Civil Service), Mr. C. B. Templar (late Indian Navy), Mr. H. L. Oliphant (late Bengal Civil Service), Major-General R. Sale Hill, C.B. (late Bengal Infantry), and Major J. G. T. Carruthers (Bengal 21st Native Infantry); the committee being assisted by Mr. Percy Wigram, General A. Y. Shortt, Colonel French, and Major Ludlow.

Amongst the many Anglo-Indian celebrities present were Sir Rivers Thompson, Sir Robert Sandeman, Sir W. G. Davis, Sir Stuart Hogg, Sir W. Olpherts, Messrs.

Scarlett Campbell, Boulnois, Magniac, D. F. Carmichael, L. C. Probyn, A. C. Mangles, &c.

About 800 ladies and gentlemen were present, and it was long after midnight when the company separated.

The whole affair was a brilliant success, for the credit of which the Club is undoubtedly indebted to the indefatigable energies of its hard-working and popular Secretary, Mr. Jacob, and to the assistance rendered to him by Mr. E. Drummond and the members of the Reception Committee.

IN MEMORIAM.—SIR BARROW H. ELLIS.

SIR BARROW ELLIS was educated at the London University; on passing out thence he proceeded to Haileybury, preparatory to entering the Civil Service of India. He arrived in the East in 1843, and was at once gazetted Assistant Magistrate and Collector at Ratnagherri. His talents and application early attracted notice, and after serving some years in minor capacities, Sir Bartle Frere—then Mr. Frere—the Commissioner in Sind, selected the young Bombay civilian to be his Secretary. This appointment was the stepping-stone to fame, and Mr. Ellis rose rapidly to be one of the Commissioners of Revenue in Bombay. Afterwards a membership of the Board of Revenue—a high and coveted post—fell to his lot, and when subsequently he was selected to be Secretary to Government, it was felt that his career was made. That he should enter the Council of the Governor of Bombay was but a fitting reward for an able, conscientious, and successful civilian of the Western Presidency; but a further honour was in store for him in the shape of a transfer to the Supreme Council at Calcutta.

After five years' service in this the brightest sphere to which he could aspire he retired from the Service. On reaching his native country in 1875 he was created a K.C.S.I., and nominated to serve in the Council of the Secretary of State for India. After a few months had elapsed (1877), by a curious misadventure his death was telegraphed to India. So much was he beloved at Bombay, so highly was he respected, and so universally popular was he amidst all classes of society that on this sad—but happily false—intelligence reaching the scene of Sir Barrow's triumphs the public offices were closed during the day as a mark of respect, and many of the shopkeepers and merchants shut up their places of business for a while as a tribute to the memory of one whom they had learned to love. Great was the joy when it transpired that the rumour of his death was not confirmed.

As a public servant Sir Barrow Ellis possessed a keen perception and quick intelligence, which stood him in good stead in the many cases wherein he had to unravel difficult and complicated histories; and it is not, perhaps, too much to assert that never has there been an officer of Government who excelled Sir Barrow Ellis in the clear mastery of details and the quick perception of the "matlab" of a case. Socially he will long live in the memories of the many who enjoyed the hospitality of a most hospitable host. No one had a keener relish for brilliant conversation and ready repartee. This much as regards Europeans. By the Natives he was well-nigh adored; he liked them, he treated them kindly, he entered into their affairs, and they appreciated the interest that he took in them—indeed, up to the time of his death he maintained a large correspondence with many whom he had known when in Bombay, while those who came to this country always found in him a ready and sound councillor, a good friend, and a stalwart protector.

Of his inner life as a man of unaffected piety, of unbounded liberality amongst the persuasion to which he belonged, it is not within our province to dwell. Were it otherwise it would be pleasant to touch upon at least one noble trait of a noble mind. But in life he never proclaimed his generosity and high-mindedness in a pecuniary matter which touched the honour of his family, and in death the modesty of the man should be reflected in the simplicity of his memoir. The few who recognise the allusion will feel what is right in the matter—the many, who are unaware of any special circumstances in Sir Barrow's career, will forgive if the veil which he drew remains, to conceal what he did not care to disclose.

Strange destiny that so lovable a man should pass away with no partner to share the triumphs of a brilliant career, no family to perpetuate the memory of an ancestor who lent renown to his race, and left "footmarks upon the sands of time."

INCIDENTS OF INDIAN LIFE.

Rev. JOHN CAVE-BROWNE, M.A.,

THE "VOICE OF INDIA."

MAGAZINE THAT GIVES EXPRESSION

TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA.

HERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect is now remedied by publishing MONTHLY (in Bombay) a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which provides a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. The Voice of India thus gives forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine advocates no views of its own. It seeks only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it will be seen that the writings thus brought before the English public are characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances are from time to time being set forth; but it is a policy of prudence, no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be subscribed for by Members of Parliament and other public men desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in Clubs, Reading-rooms, Libraries, and Institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

TESTIMONIALS.

From R. NORMAN SHAW, Architect to the Royal Academy:—

29, Bloomsbury Square, London, W.C.,
 February 19, 1884.

The "Æolus" Waterspray Company have fixed two Air Extractors and one Air Warmer in the Life School of the Royal Academy of Arts with, we all think, the happiest results. Our troubles with that school have always been very great, as owing to the amount of gas consumed, and the necessity of keeping the school well heated on account of the Nude Models, its tendency has been to get unbearably hot, and when windows were attempted to be opened the draughts were most dangerous. It is now kept at a pleasant even temperature, and there are no draughts. The reason for this is not difficult to find. The very hot air from the steam-pipes, and the fumes from the gas, are carried off as fast as they are generated, and a continual stream of warm fresh air being supplied, the school is kept comfortable.

(Signed) R. NORMAN SHAW, R.A., Architect.

From LAMB and ARMSTRONG:—

38, Grainger Street, West, Newcastle-on-Tyne
 May 25, 1887.

Re St. Peter's Church, Jarrow-on-Tyne.

Dear Sir,—We have pleasure in testifying to the efficacy of your "Invisible Roof Ventilators," which we fixed in above church with admirable results.—We are, yours faithfully, (Signed) LAMB and ARMSTRONG, Architects.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGIATE SCHOOL.

THE course of instruction is designed to PREPARE BOYS (Sons of Gentlemen, from 7 years of age) to occupy the positions of Land Owners and Occupiers, Land Agents, Surveyors, intending Colonists, &c. The education secured at this institution is of a very superior character, the whole object of the School being to impart a thoroughly practical and scientific knowledge of all agricultural subjects; a thorough moral, intellectual, and physical training; it pledges itself to send forth its pupils practically religious and sound scholars. The school is most pleasantly situated in a healthy locality.
The greatest possible care is bestowed upon the health and domestic comfort of the pupils. The diet is excellent and unlimited. The school is very strongly recommended. References throughout Great Britain.—

THE BROAD ARROW AND

NAVAL AND MILITARY GAZETTE

ESTABLISHED 1833

EVERY SATURDAY. PRICE SIXPENNY.

The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette has acquired a reputation for early and exclusive intelligence as to Appointments and other service News, for the high character of its articles, the independent course of its staff of writers, and for its earnest support of all measures for the good of the Services. Articles on specially interesting subjects appear from week to week written for the most part by officers of rank and experience, or by men of note in literature who have made the Naval and Military affairs of the country their special study. A series of Illustrated Articles is appearing weekly on Regimental Badges and History. Illustrations with descriptions are also given of new Service Inventions.

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette" freely opens its correspondence columns to all grades in the Services. By this means an opportunity for interchange of opinion is afforded, such as is offered by no other Service Journal. Its ordinary weekly issue contains fully one-fourth more matter than the other Service Journals, even with their frequent "supplements."

"The Broad Arrow and Naval and Military Gazette"
circulates largely throughout India and the Colonies.
It is supplied direct to the Army and Marine bureaux of the French, Russian, and other Governments, and it is read extensively by Officers of Foreign Services, especially of the German, French, and American Armies, who desire to acquire a true impression of facts and public opinion in England regarding Military affairs.
